the largest in the world. The most fashionable churches on reat occasions are the University. great occasions are the University, the private chapels, and those belong-ing to the Palace and to the public The matins have already begun, and the saloons-for the chapel is small, and few are there beside the widows -are full of ladies and gentlemen in full evening dress, all bolding candles, while the priest and deacon make a tour of all the rooms, exclaimed Chris-tos vokresen, to which the congregation reply. Every time the congrega-from the sanctuary they have on new robes of a different color, and the choir-boys sing continually the Easter Hymn. When the matins are over the candles are blown out, and handed to the boy who comes to receive them on a silver salver, and every one kisses and congratulates his family and friends. There is but a brief infamily termission and the mass commences, though the crowds in the saloons continue langhing and talking as if they were at a rout. We stay till we have congratulated all our acquaintances, and then go to the private chapel of one of the richer nobles.—Scribner's PLANING MILL
