Mosby, who commanded him to take off his coat, vest, pants, boots and that. All expostulations were useless. The grinning muzzle of the pistol commanded obedience. Being disrobed, his pockets and clothing were thoroughly searched, disclosing some-thing over one hundred dollars in gold, and a similar sum in green backs, which the generous Maj. pocketed, his confederates dividing the clothes be tween them. Then the valiant Maj commanded the shirt and drawers to be taken off of the already nearly nade and well nigh distracted man.— He got down on his knees and begged them not to strip him entirely naked. He was told that he had but a very short time to live and they preferred wearing clothes taken from a living man to those taken from the dead He asks what his offence was, and was answered : "The d-d yankees a few days ago killed two of my men at Fairfax Station, and we intend to kill you to retaliate." He begged and prayed for his life, but was told be bad but ten minutes to live. The ten minutes of grace had nearly expired, when at some distance through an opening in the woods, a man was seen riding leisurely on borseback. Mosby pointed him out to two of his men. saying, "Bring me that horse." two men mounted and rushed with all speed in pursuit, soon capturing both horse and rider, and brought them in. The captured man proved to be Mr .who resided near McDermott's quar-ters. As soon as became up and saw McDermott he said to Mosby, "what are you doing with that man?" His reply was, "We captured him and intend to shoot him." "You shall do know him to be a nice man, and he has not done you or our cause any harm. You must let him go free .and before to morrow night I will not have a roof to shelter me. My horses and all my property will be destroyed At first Mosby was in consequence." At first Mosby was determined McDermott should die but the other told him, "it could not be promised to do, when he was allowed ing and a pretty true one, that "Birds of a feather flock together." Mosby the guerrilla, in robbing, persecuting murdering indiscrim ring the rebellion, did nothing more than Grant as President has done since the war. So it is quite natural that Mosby should take the stump for
