

THE REPUBLICAN.

CLEARFIELD, PA. WEDNESDAY MORNING, JAN. 6, 1872.

Bees-Swarming.

There are times when it seems that bees are determined to forsake their hives after being hived and go to the woods. When they are so inclined it is the best to give them a frame of brood from some hive; then they are apt to leave, and will not once in a thousand times—and it is a much better plan than to clip their wings, as they have to be watched in swarming time or you will lose your queen.

There are several causes why bees leave their hives. The greatest of them all is, that they are hived, and a large swarm, and the hive an ordinary one; there is so much heat that they cannot stay in and work their wax, and they are obliged to leave—Many, as soon as their bees are in the hive, set it down where no air can strike it. The hive should be well ventilated and let the bees pass in and out freely, and the trouble is over.

There are a few instances where bees look up a home before swarming, but they are rare. When a swarm has left the parent hive and is clustered on a tree or elsewhere, they have no doubt sent out explorers to find a home in some hollow tree. The swarm is very apt to stay on the same tree where they settled, if it is a good cool place; if not they will soon leave for another tree—perhaps at a distance. They fly until they become weary, when they alight; if they do not succeed in finding a home, they again take flight for the west, or in a westerly direction, as is their custom. They have been known to repeat their flight several times before making a final location. This is the way they have extended so rapidly to the far west.

Bees should not be allowed to hang on the tree any longer than necessary. If you wish them to stand for the season, if you wish them to stay, so that they will have plenty of air, or they will be apt, in an unexpected time to you, to take up their line of march toward the west. It is at all surprising to see the great numbers that have spread over the country for years? They left the north-western years. Their principal enemies were, the red man and wild beasts of the forests. They went in advance of civilization.—A. F. Moon.

Control of Our Health. It is safe, however, to regard all pain and sickness as the result and the necessary result of violence done to the physical organism by the violation of law. To deny this is to deny a Creator, and that he has established laws, ordained relations, and dependencies, and decreed the unvarying conditions of cause and effect. It is blank infidelity, gross impiety, to charge the legitimate results of our own acts, our reckless physical sins, our utter disregard of God's laws, the laws which control this wonderful mechanism of the human body, upon the good Father, with no regard to his established conditions of health and longevity, referring the various forms of human suffering to "mysterious" dispositions of divine Providence. Indeed there is no more "mystery" connected with the ordinary forms of disease, or the natural causes of them, than in the event of the more usual forms of violent death. The suicide no more certainly does violence to nature than he who more tardily secures the same result by a career of dissipation. The inebriate is no more responsible for self-destruction, is no more certainly the direct cause of his degradation than the man who by a course of epicurean indulgence justly incurs the same life result. He who shortens his life by overtaxing the body or the mind, who recklessly tramples on the laws of his being, etc., is as certainly practically a suicide as he who employs the more usual weapons. He who takes his own life is a suicide, the particular means employed being a matter of trifling importance.—Science of Health.

How to Act in a Hotel.—When you enter a hotel, if there are not more than three empty chairs, occupy them all if possible; if the weather is cold, sit directly in front of the stove, and then grow about poor fire; if the landlord wants to replenish the fire, do not discommodate yourself by moving to one side to give him room, but sit still—what right has a hotel proprietor that a loafer should respect. If a paying guest arrives, don't make room for him near the stove or offer him a chair, because he is foolish enough to pay his bill and help to keep the hotel up for the accommodation of your loafers; pick up the daily paper, but do not read more than three hours, as some of the guests may want to look at it; if there are more besides yourself reading, you read aloud, it will not annoy the rest. If you should want to buy a two cent cigar, wait until the landlord goes to his dinner, let him get almost half through then step to the door and call him out and ask him if he can't give you three for five cents; if he cannot, tell him you can get them across the way.—After you have kept him talking until his dinner is cold, go out and leave the door open; it's a public house, you know, and you can do as you please. If he should complain tell your friend that he is not fit to keep a hotel; then tell him what you would do if you were proprietor.

Sheridan was much annoyed in the House of Commons by a member who kept constantly crying, "Hear! hear!" The witty orator described a fellow who wanted to play rove, but had only sense enough to play fool, and exclaimed with great emphasis, "Where shall we find a more foolish knave, or a more knavish fool than he!" "Hear! hear!" shouted the troublesome member. Sheridan turned round, and, thinking him for the prompt information set down amid a general roar of laughter.

Graham Bread.—Tomako Graham bread, of each quart of flour take a heaped teaspoonful of saleratus, adding salt and a little molasses or sugar, to make the quantity of sour milk, very much better to steam an hour or two, and then put it in the oven to brown over.

God's image slung in our souls till it stamped great cuts here and there, when, lo! the semblance of His form appears, captured by the eyes of Time.
