The use of pens with ink appears to have originated among the Greek occupants of Egypt after the conquest of that country by Alexander the Great Before that time it was customary among the Greeks and Romans to paint the letters on rolls of parchment or reed paper (papyrus) with a fine enmel's-har pencil. The Chinese at the present day use this method, which accounts for the shape of their letters. Among the Greeks and Roletters. Among the Greeks and Romans the use of a metal stylus to scratch words on waxes tablets long survived the introduction of ink and paper. The upper end of the stylus was flattened, so that when a memor-andum marked on the wax had served its purpose, it would be rubbed out with that end, and the wax could thus be made ready for another inscription. The "iron peu" of which Job speaks was a steel graver for cutting letters

Sometimes the searchers would find man and horses together, the former the the was but a handful of flour at the bottom of the barrel; not a scrap of meat was left. But the snows had ceased, their shagey little horses were well again, so every farmer hitched be taken for the town. In the little cottages of wood were women and children; the school houses were fall of little ones. Such was the country, thus its dwellers, when the blow fell. Nature would seem to have arrogated to herself all the savage attributes which had marked her first hildren their dilated nostriis, widely spread lips, and staring eyes, the signs of mortal terror. And the men, too, for an easy opportunity, and their sudden and reloutless oneslaught.

Sometimes the searchers would and man and horses together, the former lying dead, wrapped in his robes, with the two so the chief ingredient in playing dead, wrapped in his robes, with the two ships of the early all the empirical remedies for the curve of the cancer by external application. And the men, too, were sometimes Laccoons of ire—statues of writhing despair. But, as a rule, death came quietly, as it generally does in these cases, first robbing the victim of the consciousness of approaching death, which begits an approaching death, which begits an agonized straggle for life, and stilling him with a stupor said to be as deligible. The death roll cannot yet be made up with any reasonable degree of certainty. A Reasoning Horse.

A remarkable instance, says the recovered from the effects of these disasters, when it was overwhelmed by the famous cruption of Vessuvius, August 24,79, which involved it and the neighboring towns of Herculane um and Stabiæ in a common destruction.

Thenceforward, for nearly seventeen conturies, the city vanishes from history, although the name seems never to have been totally forgotten. A village, constructed from its ruins, subsequently arose upon its site; but, after the destruction of this by the craption of 562, the Campus Pompoins. of the swift coming of death, he turned on the swift coming of death, he turned of the compounds. It is said that the French and retraced his steps. Happy they who did so betimes! There were many more who, goaded on by a dreadful fear of their wives and little ones, left alone in their frail citades, torsed on through the drifts that grow deeper at every step, and cold that became more intense every moment. And there were others who grow weary cite contest, and, lying down in their robes, were falled by the elements in a Boston boost and shore as contensus the contest, and, lying down in their robes, were falled by the elements in some times to summer which knew no awakening. Sometimes the horses gave out, and the unhappy driver, be numbed and chilled, his movements impeded by his heavy clothing, had to the death, bettered and in the total again.
