Worse than all is the Military Secretary, George A. For-syth, a full major in the line of the army and of great reputation for gal-lantry as a volunteer cavalry officer during the late war and in connection with a noted Indian battle since the war. The Lieutenant General has two other Lieutenant Colonels on his personal staff-James W. Forsyth, Sheridan's Chief of Staff while in command of the cavalry corps of the Ar-my of the Potomac, and Michael V. Sheridan, brother of the Lieutenant General. These aides-do-camp both hold lower commissions, in the line to make them eligible for appointment as staff officers. The General of the Army is allowed six aides, all with the rank and pay of Colonel, under the act of 1866 and has that full number
