THE REPUBLICAN. WEDNESDAY MORNING, APRIL 23, 1873. A MAN WITH AN AIM.

Give me a man with an aim, Whatever that aim may be, Whether it's wealth or whether it's fame, It matters not to me. Let him walk in the path of right, And keep his aim in sight, And work and walk with faith away, With his eye on the glittering goal.

THE REGISTRY. Speech of Col. A. K. McClure.

Mr. McClure said: Mr. Speaker, I need not, at this stage, discuss either the original bill or the proposed substitute. The substitute which comes ostensibly as the proposition of the Senator from the First District (Mr. Alexander) is but the proposition of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. White) with some immaterial modifications.

On a previous occasion the same substitute, save a few glittering generalities, which have since been invented, was proposed by its responsible author, and supported on the floor of this body; but an exposure of its deceit and deformities silenced its advocates and made the opponents of honest elections in Philadelphia take refuge in a partisan caucus.

My appeal to Senators to deal manfully with Philadelphia. It has been decreed in caucus that no just election bill shall pass. Those who feared to meet the issue on this floor, or who tried it with indifferent success, have been able to coerce the judgment of sincere men who dare not invoke party resentment.

It is too late to pretend that there can be any honest registration of voters in Philadelphia with one party exercising absolute control of the registry. Who dare affect to believe that the canvassers, in the interest of a desperate majority, will make a just list of voters? All within the sound of my voice know that such majority canvassers have persistently registered qualified names and refused registry to qualified electors.

Christian Statesman. We have received a copy of the Christian Statesman, a paper published in Philadelphia by the fanatics of the nineteenth century in the interest of the Republican institutions in our country.

What Will You Leave Behind? Talking with an old farmer once, he said: "When I die, I am going to leave behind, as a heritage for my children, the home where they were born, made as beautiful as my means and unadorned tests will allow."

Thoughts on a New Baby. Yes, there's another of 'em up stairs now. I know it, because Pa told me I must be quiet and mused play ball, nor ask Willie Smart to come and play leap-frog with me.

Such a Getting-up.—Calling a boy in the morning, can hardly be classed under the head of "pastime," especially if the boy is fond of exercise the day before.

The Original California Pioneer.—A SURVIVOR OF THE MESQUITE AGE. The workers engaged in sinking a vertical shaft in the Black Diamond coal mine, in Mount Diablo, one day this week, came upon a live frog imbedded in the solid sandstone 175 feet below the surface.

Fit Collars to Horses' Shoulders. It is very important to have a collar fit nicely and snugly to the shoulders of the horse. It enables him to work with a dead more ease, and to employ a great deal more strength.

When we hear that a man's skeleton was sold in Cincinnati last week for four dollars and fifty cents, it is impossible not to feel a pang of compassion upon reflecting how very poor a man must be to sell his skeleton for such a sum.

What Will You Leave Behind? (Continued) Now, we repeat the question, "What will you leave behind?" Money? It will do your children little good, comparatively. Money is easily obtained.

Thoughts on a New Baby. (Continued) I saw it too. It's got a little round, red head, without any hair, with great deep wrinkles instead of eyes, and when it cries it opens its mouth as though it meant to swallow itself.

Thoughts on a New Baby. (Continued) Little Annie thinks it's nice to have a new sister, but she was the baby before and don't know anything about it.

American Chivalry. Journeying to Boston from Washington, an English authoress had her berth made into a bed, and divesting herself of her outer garments, retired behind the curtain and slept until daybreak.

Grain Statistics. The imports of grain at Buffalo last year were larger than in any preceding year, excepting 1871. For a long time there has been a steady and marked decline in the receipt of flour, imports during last year, 1,241,969 barrels, against 1,491,969 in 1871, and 1,453,913 barrels in the previous year.
