The following pretty poem is copied from the Christian We key, accompanying an illustration, which tells a story of contentment under the most humble circumstances. It is a picture of tenly life, in which human love and gratitude to the Aimighty for the smallest blessing are beautifully blended. A poor old couple are seated alone, and are about to commence their fregal meal, when the old man says:

"Ay; but wait, good wife, a minute: I have first a word to say: Do you know what day to day is? Mother, 'its our wedding day!

"Poor we've been, but not formken; Grief we've known, but never shame. 'Father, for thy ordiess mercies Still we bless thy hely name!'

Early Traces of Men.

When quarrymen uncovered slabs of Connecticut sand-stone, bearing im-pressions exactly like bird tracks, geologists reasonably inferred that, at the time the rock was forming and was as yet but wet sand, there existed gigantic birds, or bird-like animals, which strode along these ancient sea shores much as beach birds do along creation, did not invalidate the inference; one positive fact, as is well known, outvalues any amount of negative assertion, and the old theory had

But when many corroborating evidences of human existence during the pliocene period are found, as they have been, in the same strata, under conditions which satisfy careful geologists that the strata had not previously been disturbed, the astonishing character of the testimony is not sufficient ground for flatly rejecting it. At a meeting of the San Francisco Academy of Science, in May last, Dr. Blake presented the society with a number of perforated implements of serpentine, which had been taken from stratified rock near the summit of the

Dr. Blake pronounces the rock in which these interesting specidiscovered to be of an age not later than the pliocene period; while Professor Whitney, the State Geologist, is of opinion that it is still more ancient. Anyhow, man appears to have antedated the upheaval of the coast range and the attendant geological changes; a remoteness in time which makes the fossil skeleton found at Natchez and New Orleans, and the human fragments under the Florida canals, seem
