their districts. All the rest of the Representatives still keep it in their pockets, the greater part of whom doubtless intend to brave public opinion by never surrendering a penny of it. The Senators of the last Congress make rather a better show. There being two vacancies, their whole number was seventy-two. Sixty-four of them have drawn the money, and sixteen of these have returned it to the Treasury. This proves that forty-eight Senators still stick to the stolen cash, while eight have not yet made up their minds whether to join the honest men or the rogues.
