

Wakeup's Washing.

Mr. Wakeup, a married man of Bridgeport, quit work early the other afternoon, and went home for the purpose of spending the evening—or rather half the night—with a number of his friends. He found his wife lying on the lounge enjoying a sick headache, but he couldn't find a clean shirt. Mrs. Wakeup said his shirts were washed but not ironed, and she was too ill to do it, and it was the girl's afternoon out. A shade of disappointment clouded his brow, and rushing into the kitchen, he slammed the door with such earnestness, and fortunately found an iron on the range, nice and hot. Then he dived into the basket of dampened clothes, and found one of his shirts at the bottom, just as he expected.

He spread it out on the table without first removing the oilcloth cover and hurriedly consulted his watch.—Then he couldn't find the iron-holder, and substituted his pocket handkerchief, and after burning four of his fingers and breaking one of the commandments, landed the hot iron on his shirt bosom. He thought the garment had a strange look, but supposed it would assume its proper shape when ironed—and he shoved the iron up and down like a jack-plane. The labor seemed so easy that he mentally said he had a mind to follow the business for a living. Then he undertook to turn the shirt, and just because it adhered to the glazed table cover, he gave it a violent jerk, adding at least six inches more to the split in the back.

Then he noticed for the first time that he had set the hot iron on the tail of the garment and scorched a hole in it as large as his hand, and in his haste to remove the smoothing machine, he neglected to use the holder, and he dropped the hot fraud on his choice top; and when Mrs. Wakeup, who was started by the intensity of his language, entered the kitchen, holding her head with both hands, she discovered her husband hopping about the room on one foot and clapping the other with both hands. The sympathy that Mrs. Wakeup tendered was not of a nature that her blithered husband yearned for just at that particular moment. She placed her arms akimbo and indignantly observed:

"Ain't you ashamed of yourself, you old fool! darning the can-can around here and your wife with a nearly dead, too! And—here her eyes rested upon the wreck on the table—and if the old idiot hadn't gone and ruined my best chemise! O—the—the—" Wakeup didn't tarry to hold his infuriated better half finish the sentence, but adroitly dodged the broom handle, and limped out of the room and up to bed, without his supper. The next morning he told his friends that the reason that he failed to keep his engagement, was he was suddenly attacked by the cholera morbus at the supper table, and like to have died during the night.—Norristown Herald.

Well Put.

The Golden Age thus goes for the elders of Horace Greeley:— "During the twelve months of last year, when we were doing our best to urge the claims of Horace Greeley to the suffrage of his countrymen, we were constantly told that Mr. Greeley was a man so unskilled in financial economy that his election would disturb the moneyed classes. Henry Clews & Co., Jay Cooke & Co., Fisk & Hatch, and other firms made themselves conspicuous by discrediting Mr. Greeley on the ground that his election would unsettle the money market. "Under President Grant," said they, "we shall have prosperity and peace." But Grant's election has been followed by the very panic which it was expressly designed to prevent. Moreover, the very firms that trusted to it for safety are the chief victims to their own false prophecy. Furthermore the conspicuous capitalists who last summer advocated Grant's election—we mean such men as Horace B. Claflin, Henry Clews, William Orton, and others—distinguishing themselves on a recent Sunday morning by urging Grant to violate the laws from the land in order to relieve them from a pinch and pressure which they were once sure could come only through the election of Grant's rival!

The campaign slanders which these professed exponents of the business community uttered against a blameless man a year ago, have now been brought home, by a sort of avenging poetic justice, to their own doors, and find a strange commentary in their own misfortunes.

Race Horse Killed.

A celebrated race horse was killed at the Herd Park, Williamsport, lately. The Gazette thus notices the race. Kentucky George and Capitola were entered for a half mile dash, running race, best two in three, Kentucky winning the pole. First Heat.—The horses kept well together throughout the heat, but in spite of the urging of Kentucky George by the driver, Capitola came in first, winning the heat in 58½ seconds. Second Heat.—The horses started off as lively as on the first heat, but before reaching the second quarter, Kentucky George stumbled, and was thrown with the head in plunging position, the weight of the body breaking the animal's neck; the driver, Vandeyke, of Turbutville, was pitched forward, struck upon the track, and rolled under the pole. Kentucky George gave three or four kicks, and died in less than two minutes; the driver, stunned by the sudden fall, for it was like the instant checking of a railroad train, made one or two attempts before getting upon his feet; he finally succeeded, but was compelled to support himself upon the fence. Capitola, being in advance, pushed on until the heat was completed. It was feared that Vandeyke was seriously injured, and the race from the race course building to the opposite side of the track was exciting to witness. The driver was fortunately not seriously injured, but had been thrown against the fence, instead of directly forward upon the track, undoubtedly he would have been killed, so great was the speed at the time the accident occurred. The owner of Kentucky George is Mr. Foreman, of Watsonstown. Capitola was declared the winner of the race.
