

GEORGE B. GOODLANDER, Editor and Proprietor, CLEARFIELD, PA.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JAN. 28, 1874.

We observe by the Auditor-General's Report that the Williamsport riots cost the people of the State over $24,000. Rather too much money for a local loss.

DEATH OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.—A London despatch of Monday announces the death of the great African explorer, Dr. Livingstone, which is said to have taken place in June last in the interior of Africa, caused by an attack of dysentery.

One of the unpardonable sins, now heaped at the head of the new Chief Justice, by some of the loyal press, is to the effect that Judge Waite voted for Gen. McClellan in 1864. That, to our mind, is the only redeeming quality we have heard of.

The First National Bank of Wayneburg, Greene county, has suspended. Cause, bad management. The officers give out the old story, "nobody will do anything by the failure." O, no! Who ever heard of people losing anything by the failure of a bank?

Loyalists are becoming alarmed over the fact that there are thirty-one Confederates in the present Congress, three of whom are Senators.—Yes, gentlemen, five years more will make negroes, scalawags and carpet-baggers as scarce in Congress as hen teeth in the Loyal League room.

READ IT.—We hope our readers will not fail to peruse an article found on the first page of last week's issue, relating to the villainies of Gen. O. O. Howard, the celebrated negro bureau boss. His friends have exhibited him for over ten years as a sample, to the worldly-minded, of the "Christian Soldier." Reader, read and reflect.

The election of Col. Robert E. Withers, on the 15th, as United States Senator from Virginia, to take the seat of Lewis Radcliff, is the last "straw" piled on the Radical camel's back in the old Dominion. Radicalism is as defunct in that State as before the war, although it has 50,000 negroes to "back it."

A ROYAL MARRIAGE.—The Lion and (not the Lamb) but the Bear lying down together. The Duke of Edinburgh last week married the grand Duchess Maria Alexandrovna, of Russia. The Royal ceremony took place at St. Petersburg, on the 23d. Thus England and Russia have joined one pair of hands, at all events.

An exchange says: "Mr. Waite's fanciful connection with politics in Ohio was in a contest for congress with James M. Ashley, in which he came out second best." That is not much of a recommendation for the new Chief Justice, to be beaten by such a notorious political freebooter as Ashley. It is a serious reflection upon the people of the Toledo district, or somebody else. The compliment is not even "second best."

It pains us to chronicle the demise of James F. Shunk, Esq., which occurred at Harrisburg, on Monday week. He was the son of Ex-Governor Shunk, son-in-law of Judge Black, and late editor of the Easton Argus. He was without doubt the ablest and raciest magazine and newspaper writer in the State. He died in the full vigor of manhood. His talents were commensurate with his opportunities.—But all are now buried.

A Radical exclaims: "The President is reported as saying that 'Virginia has given him more trouble than any other Southern State.'" "The government" evidently alluded to the carrying of elections. Bayonets have caused no intimidation in that State. The whites and negroes keep on voting and electing Democrats to all the offices. It must be annoying to many other besides Grant.

HALF AND HALF.—Jones of the Herald (not of New York, but of Tyrone), went off this way last week: "Ring rule is what all the country. Care that we are all right. The Republican party need the country, freed the slave and made a man of him. It is a progressive party and the country has prospered under its rule than under any other party in the history of the nation."

The two first lines are true, but the balance, when grouped together, makes a "whopper" for an individual governed by military etiquette.

SENSIBLE.—The editor of the Press remarks: "President Grant has acted most wisely in refusing to interfere in the political affairs of Texas. It is evidently done not regard with favor the attempt of a State to override the clearly expressed will of the people in a purely political matter."

Now, why did the editor not treat the Louisiana outrage in a similar manner, when the President and his Attorney-General sent the United States troops to the capitol to prevent the legally elected State officers from taking their seats? That occurred a little over a year ago. If the President's conduct is right toward Texas, it is outrageously wrong toward Louisiana. The conduct of the people in those two States was precisely alike, but the conduct of "the government" and its brother-in-law is the reverse.

The trio, Grant, Williams and Casey, may have had their eyes opened.

The Indian Robberies.

It was generally supposed that the depth of official corruption and political immorality was reached and exposed when Oakes Ames "blowed out" the Christian Statesmen...

Letter From Harrisburg.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 26, 1874. Mr. Editor.—Legislation is progressing favorably at the Capital...

The elegant rules prepared under the new Constitution for the government of both branches of the Legislature, work so smoothly and regularly that everything brought forward for consideration is discussed by both parties in a gentlemanly, dignified, and argumentative way...

It is indeed a pleasure to sit and listen to their proceedings, and all visitors speak of the dignity and general conduct of the House, as a vast improvement over the combination that has no long plundered and provoked them...

But few bills have as yet been acted upon. Hereafter, at this time in the session, the private calendars would have begun to appear bulky already. Now there is no private bill calendar, and the only bills acted upon are those of public importance.

McClure's election bill, in the Senate, (of which I wrote you in a previous letter), was amended in the Senate, by striking out many of the provisions, and inserting in their stead the Registry Law, under which we have been voting since 1870.

The season for the display of ornamental pyrotechnics is now fully upon us. The Legislators of fifteen States are now in session. A people so much governed should be well governed.

Grant's family, in imitation of royalty, would do well to believe in marriage as a subject. Having provided for all his brothers-in-law, he will soon have an opportunity of trying on a son-in-law.

H. W. Beecher says there is about as much religion in the act of putting a horse shoe over the door for good luck as in putting a gilt-edged Bible on the centre table for the same purpose.

The Richmond Dispatch thinks President Grant has done more to sustain his motto, "Let us have peace," in dropping Governor Davis, of Texas, open season by all his other measures combined.

William Pinckney Whyte, Governor of Maryland, has been elected United States Senator from that State. Mr. Whyte is an able man and a good Democrat and will be a valuable accession to our strength in the Senate.

The most confiding woman lives in Providence. She went to an auction, and, knowing the prevalence of thieves at such places, asked a nice looking man to take care of her pocketbook, containing $80. He is still taking care of it.

Gen. Leggett has prohibited the distribution of New Year's penknives to the employees of the Patent Office. Mentoring Mrs. Williams retains the $1,500 carriage paid for from the contingent fund of the Department of Justice.

Chief Justice Waite expects to resign the presidency of the Ohio constitutional convention and will leave for Washington on Monday of next week, to enter upon the discharge of his duties as Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Ten Broeck, the sporting horse owner, and Blanton Duncan, the sporting politician, are engaged in a lawsuit involving a $150,000. Duncan disputes the validity of the deeds by which Ten Broeck's wife transferred to her husband all her property.

According to the Atkinson (Kansas) Globe, while soldiers were digging up a grave at Fort Kearney, a few days ago, they found a coffin filled with snakes. One of them remarked that it would not require a Kansas coroner to tell what that fellow died of.

The Secretary of War thinks that he can reduce his expenditures to the extent of $12,000,000. In view of the fact that he was recently married, his economy is commendable. Mrs. Bellamy will not ride in a Government carriage.

Orlway, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, has been drawing $1,500 a year in his own name, who was booked as a messenger. The youth was not in Washington, but still the old man was able to draw the salary.—Those Radical office holders are generally robust.

It would seem that the press of the country must be very careful hereafter in its comments upon the course of President Grant, or he will send his son Fred and other hired assassins to take the lives of the offending editors. The editor of the New York Sun had better look out in time.

When the legislature of Massachusetts, a State which was opposed to the Mexican war, refused to equip a regiment, Caleb Cushing did that work at his own expense, and was appointed colonel, with a son of Daniel Webster as major. While in Mexico he was made a brigadier general by President Polk.

Coupon Vets.

The Judges are soon to be in hot water. Two thousand women are studying law preparatory to practice. Chicago has had another heavy fire, this time principally confined to the railroad depots, however. Loss $600,000.

The strike of the coal miners of the Lehigh region is said to be at an end. Work will be resumed at the rates of 1873.

Mrs. Woodruff is lecturing in Wisconsin and has got so that she can do a frozen potato nine times out of ten.

Josh Billings says: "There ain't anything that will completely kill huzness, though a second wife has been known to hurry it some."

Horace Greeley's birthday was celebrated in New York by a ball. Fancy the Sages of Chappaqua dancing a mazurka.

The sale of pews in Mr. Beecher's church, a few weeks since, amounted to $59,470. The highest price paid was $370, and the lowest $11.

A Presbyterian church at Pennington, New Jersey, costing $25,000, was destroyed by fire on Sunday last. A defective flue was the cause.

Ex-Senator Graham, defaulting president of the Wallkill national bank, was sentenced to ten years imprisonment in the Albany penitentiary.

The police of New York made a descent upon the Kentucky Lottery, arrested all persons found on the premises, and seized the safes, books, money, etc.

The New York Sun intimates that the only law that governs Secretary Fish in the discharge of his official duties, is his own son-in-law, Sidney Webster.

The season for the display of ornamental pyrotechnics is now fully upon us. The Legislators of fifteen States are now in session. A people so much governed should be well governed.

Grant's family, in imitation of royalty, would do well to believe in marriage as a subject. Having provided for all his brothers-in-law, he will soon have an opportunity of trying on a son-in-law.

H. W. Beecher says there is about as much religion in the act of putting a horse shoe over the door for good luck as in putting a gilt-edged Bible on the centre table for the same purpose.

The Richmond Dispatch thinks President Grant has done more to sustain his motto, "Let us have peace," in dropping Governor Davis, of Texas, open season by all his other measures combined.

William Pinckney Whyte, Governor of Maryland, has been elected United States Senator from that State. Mr. Whyte is an able man and a good Democrat and will be a valuable accession to our strength in the Senate.

The most confiding woman lives in Providence. She went to an auction, and, knowing the prevalence of thieves at such places, asked a nice looking man to take care of her pocketbook, containing $80. He is still taking care of it.

Gen. Leggett has prohibited the distribution of New Year's penknives to the employees of the Patent Office. Mentoring Mrs. Williams retains the $1,500 carriage paid for from the contingent fund of the Department of Justice.

Chief Justice Waite expects to resign the presidency of the Ohio constitutional convention and will leave for Washington on Monday of next week, to enter upon the discharge of his duties as Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Ten Broeck, the sporting horse owner, and Blanton Duncan, the sporting politician, are engaged in a lawsuit involving a $150,000. Duncan disputes the validity of the deeds by which Ten Broeck's wife transferred to her husband all her property.

According to the Atkinson (Kansas) Globe, while soldiers were digging up a grave at Fort Kearney, a few days ago, they found a coffin filled with snakes. One of them remarked that it would not require a Kansas coroner to tell what that fellow died of.

The Secretary of War thinks that he can reduce his expenditures to the extent of $12,000,000. In view of the fact that he was recently married, his economy is commendable. Mrs. Bellamy will not ride in a Government carriage.

Postponement of Legislative Re-Union.

The committee on invitation, having ascertained that the surviving members of the legislature, their officers and the officers of the executive departments, prior to the first 1850, are more numerous than at any subsequent period...

It will be a pleasing and interesting sight to behold those veteran representatives of past generations, who were the true exponents of the public sentiment of those times.

Whatever may have been their party differences, their soothing lapse of time has long since brought to a level the rough asperities of political contention and left alone in their stead the fond recollections of mutual respect and social intercourse.

We sincerely hope those venerable Nestors may meet in numbers at the seat of government and in their happy reunion recall to the minds of the cabinet officers at Washington the patriotic and public-spirited patriot.

The Democrats of Harrisburg nominated D. W. Sellar for Mayor of that city on Saturday night.

Another Election.

Part of the time of the House last week was taken up by the discussion of Mr. Sumner's Civil Rights bill. Several speeches were delivered upon it, among others by Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, against, and two negro members in favor of it.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

Board of Pardons.

The new Constitution places the recommendation for pardons under the jurisdiction of a Board composed of the Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Attorney-General and Secretary of Internal Affairs.

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Under the circumstances the Governor has done well; but it seems to us there was a more direct route.—The Secretary of Internal Affairs will, in effect, act as duties, but about the same as the present Surveyor-General. Why not then just let the Surveyor-General occupy a place in this Board?

Civil Rights.

Part of the time of the House last week was taken up by the discussion of Mr. Sumner's Civil Rights bill. Several speeches were delivered upon it, among others by Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, against, and two negro members in favor of it.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

Another Election.

Part of the time of the House last week was taken up by the discussion of Mr. Sumner's Civil Rights bill. Several speeches were delivered upon it, among others by Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, against, and two negro members in favor of it.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

It is certainly an infringement of the rights that belong exclusively to the States, and is a long step in the direction of that centralism toward which we are rapidly drifting.

Valuation of all property assessed for the year 1874.

Clearfield County, Pa., subject to revision by the Assessors of the respective Townships and Boroughs of the County.

Clearfield County, Pa., subject to revision by the Assessors of the respective Townships and Boroughs of the County.

Clearfield County, Pa., subject to revision by the Assessors of the respective Townships and Boroughs of the County.

Clearfield County, Pa., subject to revision by the Assessors of the respective Townships and Boroughs of the County.

Clearfield County, Pa., subject to revision by the Assessors of the respective Townships and Boroughs of the County.

Clearfield County, Pa., subject to revision by the Assessors of the respective Townships and Boroughs of the County.

Clearfield County, Pa., subject to revision by the Assessors of the respective Townships and Boroughs of the County.

Clearfield County, Pa., subject to revision by the Assessors of the respective Townships and Boroughs of the County.

</