THE REPUBLICAN.
WEDNESDAY MORNING, MARCH 25, 1874.
NO MORTGAGE ON THE FARM.
Mary, let's let the fatted calf and celebrate the day.
For the last dreadful mortgage on the farm is wiped away!
I have got the papers with me, they are right as right can be!
Let us laugh and sing together, for the dear old farm is free!

A Fallen Hero.
The Erie Dispatch, of February 26, says: "Fifteen days in jail for vagrancy was the sentence imposed on James Lafferty, a gray-headed, wandering vagabond of the happy-go-lucky stripe, who is scarcely over sober, but who, drunk or sober, is harmless to all except himself. He was a heretic; one of the men in reality that John Jay must have imagined him to be, who wrote the graphic lines of the singer of the Prairie Belle:
"I'll hold her nose against the wind The last gallop's mine." On the 9th of August, 1841, the steamer Erie, then the finest on the lake and which had only made her trip previously—having then on board a large number of the citizens of Erie, with their families, and also the "Piqueur Ice Band," which had stayed on from the time of the trial excursion—left Buffalo for this port.
It was a bright, sunny day, and the lake was almost dead calm. When nearing Dunkirk the boat was discovered to be on fire, and the flames spread rapidly. She was headed for shore, and the horror-stricken passengers crowded to the forward part of the boat as the smoke poured out and bowed through the Turkish lines, one thousand out of three thousand surviving. Colonel Miller, after the peace, bought the sword of Byron from the family of a Greek officer, to whom Byron had given it, and who was subsequently found dead on the battlefield, with the sword knotted to his wrist. The valuable souvenir, after some vicissitudes, returned to the possession of Colonel Miller, and is treasured by his descendants. According to the Chicago Tribune writer, the lady in whose possession it now is, was obliged to flee from her residence on the night of the Chicago fire, and only saved a small box of plate, the shawl thrown over her head and the sword of Byron. Miller brought home with him two sons of Madame Miltiades, whose husband claimed a lineal descent from the hero of Marathon, and was slain on the same field with Marco Bozzaris. Her fortune being ruined she entrusted her boys to him; one was adopted into his own family, and the other into that of a friend. These two have since grown up to success as American citizens. Colonel Miller himself married wealth, and settled down to the practice of law at Montpelier. As a member of the legislature he introduced the first resolution for the abolition of slavery, and became one of the most ardent and able advocates of the cause. A granite obelisk there marks the resting place of his remains.

Legend of a Bad Indian.
THE FLATHEAD WAY OF ACCOUNTING FOR THE HOT WATER IN WASSWEILER'S SPRINGS.
A long, long time ago, according to the traditions of the Flathead Indians, they went one year to hunt buffalo, just as they do now, and their trails were the same up the Hell Gate and Little Blackfoot and down Ten Mile.
The present site of Helena was a favorite camping place. "In those days," according to one of the chiefs of said tribe well versed in its legendary lore, "there was one of the Flathead braves who was a bad Indian; he had no respect for the virtues of the beautiful Indian maidens; he was a regular horse jockey—made races for ponies and buffalo robes, all on the square, and then "dropped" the opponent's feet and brutes; he played that ancient and respectable game of "old sledge" in such a dextrous manner as to vanquish all his adversaries, who never could account for the manner in which he "turned Jack" to a bad way of "holding on" at draw poker; that made his reputation in the mountains. In the month of August, in the most approved Flathead jargon; in short, he was a "very bad Indian." Once upon a time, when they were camped on the little stream where Helena is now situated, on their way to hunt buffalo, the devil "called" for the wicked brave, and told him his time had come, and that he must accompany him to the unhappy hunting ground of bad Indians. The Indian told the wicked Spirit, he had no money, but he would try to arrange with other braves of the tribe, such as a few collections to make, etc., and that if his satanic majesty would go out to the present site of Wassweiler's hot springs, he would come as soon as the wind quip blowing. The devil agreed to the terms, and departed to await the coming of the wind and the coming of the brave. As the wind his never quit blowing, he had no money, but he would try to arrange with other braves of the tribe, such as a few collections to
