How very odd that posts should suppose
There is no postry about your nose,
When, plain as a sand anose on his face,
A noveless face would lask postic grace,
Noses have sympathy, a lower knows;
Noses are always touched when lips are kissing,
Who would not to kins if ness were missing?
Why, what would be the fragrants of a rose,
And where would be the mortal means of telling
Whether a vide or wholecome slor flows
Accumi say, if we swuced no sense of smelling?
I know a poss—a nose no other knows—
Neath starry cyes, o'er raby lips it grows—
There's beauty in its form and noisio in its blows!

The Danbury Man who has a Horse MONTOUR HOUSE, Opposite the Court House.

The man across the way has horse and carriage. We have none. Three sadder words we never saw The man across the way drives gally forth every pleasant afternoon with his wife beside him. And we envy him, and can't help it. There are others of the neighbors who envy him, and could we reach each other's hearts we would find that our thoughts were following the lucky horseman in his various turns about town, in his cantoring here and trotting there, and in the shine of his carriage and in the proud bearing of his horse. But it is a sadness to see him drive away, yet there is a pleasure in seeing thin come back. For it is dark when he returns, the sunshine is gone, and in its stead is darkness with frost in it. He smiled thore is a pleasure in socing him come back. For it is dark when he returns, the sunshine is gone, and in its stead is darkness with frost in it. He smiled complacently when he handed his wife into the carriage, but he doesn't smile when he hands her out. Perhaps the operation requires so much care and attention that it would not be right to smile. We know his nose is red, because we can see it as he drives by the lamp. We know that his feet by the lamp. We know that his feet are frigid, and that his legs are asleep, by the way he gets down to the ground. We are beginning to see how wrong it is to envy our fellow man. He looks at her as he runs into the house and into the arms of the genial base-burner, and gloomily SUSQUEHANNA HOUSE, the door, his legs have awakened, and appear to be repreaching him; his eyes are full of water, and his soul overare full of water, and his soul overflowing with discontent. No harness was ever before so difficult to remove as this is. He feels the wrath bubbling up to the highest water-mark and he could scream out-he is so mad. We HUEY & CHRIST. are seeing now how wicked it is to envy our fellow man. He hears footair as the various neighbors, having returned from their work, and having no horse, disappear hastily within and take with them the bright, cheerful light. He gets the horse in the door, and starts to look up the lantern. He bumps various parts of his anatomy against articles it is too dark to learn his pain and misery, were he not awed by the astonishing profusion of things he was falling over. He gives up the lantern and pulls off the harness to hang it up. The straps dangle down and get under his feet and trip him, and the impatient animal suddenly bolts into the stall before it is fully undressed. Then there is another search for the lantern, and derive the search for the lautern, and during this he raps his head against a beam, and the blow is so violent that it stirs up every one of his ideas, including the one which tells him that the lantern

Take two tablespoonfuls of best starch, add a very little water to it, rub and stir with a spoon into a thick paste, carefully breaking all the lumps and particles. Add a pint of boiling water, stirring it at the same time; stirring it occasionally to keep it from burning. Add a piece of starch polish the size of a large pea; if this is not at hand use a tablespoonful of gum arabic solution (made by pouring boil-ing water upon gum arabic and standing until clear and transparent), or a piece of clean mutton tallow half the size of a nutmeg and a teaspoon of salt will do, but is not as good. Strain the starch through a strainer or a plece of thin muslin. Have the shirts turned wrong side out; dip the bosoms carefully in the starch and squeeze out, repeating the operation until the bosoms are throughly and evenly saturated with starch approach to day.

MOULDING AND BOSTON THE PROCESSION OF size of a nutmeg and a teaspoon of bosoms in clear water; wring out and roll up tightly. Pirst iron the back by folding it lengthwise through the centre; next iron the wristbands, and both sides of the sleeves; then the coliar band; now place the bosom-board under the bosom, and with a dampened napkin rub the bosom from the top toward the bottom, smooth-ing and arranging each plait neatly. With a smooth, moderately hot flatiron begin at the top and iron downward, and continue the operation until the bosom is perfectly dry and shining. Remove the bosom-board, and iron the front of the shirt. An honest old deacon in a Connec ticat parish was sorely troubled about the Copernican system of the unitaral and untrue, and he carried his doctrine to his minister. The latter being in his own eyes a scientific man, and also a believer in Coperniens, said the sun was a stationary body, not ravelving, as the deacon maintained, second the earth. But the latter pointed with an air of triumph to the form of Joshua when he commanded the "aun to stand still." "Very well," said the minister; "show me, if you had been properly is the brough of an the passage of acripture where it and Joshua over commanded the aun to move again."
