Stratagem for a Dinner. The following characteristic anecdote of Theodore Hook is given in Bascom's life of that extraordinary man. One of the streets near Soho Square, either Dean Street or Brick Street, was the scene of action. Hook was lounging upon one of the streets in company with Terry, the actor, when they saw through the kitchen window preparations for a handsome dinner.

"What a feast!" said Terry. "Jolly do!" I should like to make one of them.

"I'll take any lot," returned Hook, "but I'll call for me at ten o'clock, and you'll find that I shall be able to give a tolerable account of the worthy gentleman's champagne and venison."

So saying, he marched up the steps, gave an authoritative rap with the burnished knocker, and was quickly admitted to the sight of his astonished companions.

As a matter of course he was immediately ushered by the servant, as an unexpected guest, into the drawing-room, where a large party had already assembled.

The crowd and the better word, That wounded as it fell, The chilling word of sympathy, The hand raised, that while the heart, The hard words were sounding high, These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand Must find a chance to wake here— Be firm and just and true, Do shall a light that cannot fade Beam on us from on high, And these things shall never die.

"I beg your pardon," he said, contriving at last to get in a word; "but your name, sir, I did not quite catch."

"Don't apologise, I beg," graciously interposed Theodore. "Smith—my name is Smith—and as you justly observe, servants are always making some stupid blunder or another. I remember a remarkable instance, etc."

"But really, my dear sir," continued the host, at the termination of the story illustrative of stupidity in servants, "I think the mistake on the present occasion, does not originate in the source you allude to; I certainly did not expect the pleasure of Mr. Smith's company at dinner to-day."

"No, I dare say not; you said four in your note I know, and it is now, I have been detained in the city, and I was about to explain when—"

"Why, Mr. Thompson, of course—old friend of my father; I have not the pleasure, indeed, of being personally known to you; but, having received your invitation to my arrival from Liverpool—Fifth street, four o'clock, family party—certainly you see I have taken you at your word. I am only afraid I have kept you waiting."

"No, not at all. But permit me to observe, my dear sir, my name is not exactly Thompson—it is Jones, and—"

"Jones?" repeated the self-styled Smith, in a dimly assumed composure. "I am a man of the name, I am not;—yes, I must—good heaven! I see it all. My dear sir, what an unfortunate blunder—wrong house—what must you think of such intrusions! I am really at a loss for words in which to apologise. You will permit me to retire at present, and to-morrow—"

"Pray don't think of retiring," exclaimed the hospitable old gentleman; "you are a man of the name, I am not;—yes, I must—good heaven! I see it all. You will permit me to retire at present, and to-morrow—"

A Race for a Bride. The following is from the Jackson (Tenn.) Whig of May 9: Love laughs at bolts and bars and yet, at the same time, there is many a slip betwixt the cup and the lip. The following true story pungently illustrates both of the above truisms. It happened a few days ago in an adjoining county. A comely youth fell in love with a rural belle. She smiled upon his suit and doubtless sighed upon his waistcoat. They resolved to become "twain of one flesh," but the stern father of the would-be bride was dead against it and fiercely forbade the bans. But "love laughs at bolts and bars" and the young couple stole away amid the friendly darkness of a moonless night, fled to a neighbor's and about dawn the next morning succeeded in procuring the services of a parson. All things were made ready to tie the silken knot, and the hopes of the lovers beat high with the joys of a speedy nuptial occasion, does not originate in the source you allude to; I certainly did not expect the pleasure of Mr. Smith's company at dinner to-day.

"No, I dare say not; you said four in your note I know, and it is now, I have been detained in the city, and I was about to explain when—"
