This movement startled the reptile, which glided from him to his brother, who was sleeping with him. The snake passed from his breast to his brother's face, when, in a fatal moment Henry Straley raised his hands to tear it away. There was a ficree rattle and a load ery from the half awakened boy, and the monster buried its fangs in his right hand and a second time in his check. There was a load scream from Henry as the peor boy jumped to his feet, while the snake glided from the blankets to a large flat rock near the embers of the fire. Mr. Jenkins fired his revolver at it, and the second shot brought it down. Poor young Straley was seen suffer- ing the most intense agony. His broth- er, at his request, cut out a large part of the check in hopes that the poison had not penetrated very deep, and a tight hgature was bound around the wrist of the hitten hand, which was bathed in cold water. But nothing the horrified young men could do availed to save the poor boy. He died in less than two hours in the most ter- ribie agony. Had the party been sup- plied with a plentiful supply of whisky his life might have been saved but they had none with them. The body	near, when some and sign gave token that the roof of the old workings to the west was about to fall. This had been so provided for as to insure its coming quietly, but the men, fearing the concussion of air which results from violent falls, and which drives even loaded cars like playthings before it out of the mines, refused to remain. Watchers were stationed at safe dis- tances, but the fall came so gently that they were unaware of it. On March 1st the officers found that it was over, hat while the men were absent the fire bad swept through the open space and covered a field far beyond its orig- inal dimensions ; air currents were re- wersed ; connecting passages closed or flooded. To stop the fins was certain death to the men, to keep them going was to field the fire. It was at this time when new meas- urces were imperative that the mine boss, Lewis S. Jones, urged the trial of steam. From the 12th to the 18th of March it was tested in spaces still en- closed. A well entirely surrounding the old workings was completed with eager haste ; all cave holes above were tightly packed with clay ; a single air- way, to be afterwards gradually closed, alone remaining. The steam from eighteen boilers was driven down	Middle Ages, or melted in rich flakes from their walls. Two magicians, or philosophers, at last detected the error of ages; and Albertas Magans and Paracelsus, prob- ably both discovered that zinc was as indestructible and as free from foreign substances as gold. It seemed a pure element. Paracelsus, who was fond of penetrating to the source of things, admits that he could not tell how the bright metal grew; nor in the height of their magic renown was it ever foreseen that the rare substance the sorecerers had discovered would one day shed knowledge, in tongues of fire, from London to Jagan. Two centuries followed, during which no metallic substance was dis- covered. Paracelsus found no successor. Albertas, almost the first man of science in Europe, was remembered only as a sorecerer. It was not until 1733, that the vast field of unctallic discovery be- gan to open upon man.
