What a sacrifice most of us willingly make. How the type will unlie though the heart may and us bend to the ways of the world for the Of its poor and sentity praises. And time runs as with such pittless flow Units or itsee are warded before us know What work to finish before we go To our long rest nuder the dates. And too office we fail in a needess fight. For evening is so monk in the places of right, And the end is so far beyond our sight. "It's as when mee starts on a chase by hight, An unknown shade porcing. Even so do we see, when our rates is run. That of all we have striven for little is won, And of all the work our strength has dene. How little was worth the doing.

the tear care can ever the infelies city, e shall chain up its beaven in heighter array Than if all earth rang with our project, if he good we have done shall noter falle, ough the work be wrought and wages paid if he warried frame of the laborer laid All pearsfully under the datese.

A FEMALE LOBBY

Any time during the season of Con gress one ante room to the Senate Chamber is filled with females gathered in groups about the learned law-makers, or attracting them singly. Some of them are wives or daughters of the Senators, some are strangers visiting at the Capitol ; but the majority is made up of women pressing claims be-re Congress. To get a better look at these feminine agents, one must visit the lobby to the rear of the Speaker's chair in
