THE WORLD'S FAIR, 1914.
Columbian, printed with the beautiful display of...
In his speech, told his hearers that all pious, temperate and virtuous men belong to their party, and that all the wicked and drunkards, the keepers of beer and other saloons, were Democrats; and when he took his chair, he folded his hands and dropped his eyes, and was a look of religious sorrow, in view of our sins, which was most touching in a custom house officer. He was mentally praying that Chandler might go into the cabinet—Men buttoned up their pockets when they read that speech, and wondered if we were to be afflicted with another brood of that style of Christian statesmen who had lately disgraced religion and dishonored the legislation of our country. The country was surprised when a scholarly man, one who has spoken plainly of abuses at Washington, and, in the main, fairly of reform in this State, was made president of the body. But the will managers knew of a peculiarity in his make which would serve their turn. In a little while, after he had spoken wisely and well about reform, which was received with decent cheers, there was vociferous applause.

THE GREAT EVIL.
We esteem Ex-Gov Seymour, of New York, one of our ablest and most upright statesmen, now living. Below will be found a synopsis of a speech he delivered in Brooklyn, in that State, a few days before the election, that will rightly repay every man to read it. The great truths he utters are easily understood though expressed in superb language. His speech was almost entirely devoted to the theme of financial mismanagement and government extravagance. He showed that the interest on the vast national debt was a burden that had imposed by bad management and unnecessary expenditure. For ten years we have been expending $65,000,000 per year in excess of our necessities, which would have paid in that time $300,000,000 of the debt and interest.

PENSION FRAUDS.
It appears from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, made up of the close of the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1914, that 234,321 persons are carried on the rolls, including army and navy invalids, widows, and survivors of the War of 1812. Most remarkable of all in this aggregate is a godly number of widows of revolutionary soldiers, who seem to have been blessed with exceptional cases of life, as some of them are returned as having married before the year 1800, and others not long after that date.

EGGS AS DIET.
On this subject the Poultry Review has the following pertinent and suggestive remarks: 'Would it not be wise to substitute more eggs for meat in our daily diet? About one-third of the weight of an egg is solid nutriment. This is more than can be said of meat. There are no bones or tough pieces that have to be laid aside. A good egg is made up of 10 parts shell, 50 parts white, and 40 parts yolk. The white of an egg contains 86 per cent water, the yolk of an egg 52 per cent. The average of an egg is about two ounces. Practically an egg is animal food, and yet there is none of the disagreeable work of the butcher necessary to obtain it. The vegetarians of England use eggs freely, and many of these men are eighty and ninety years old. Eggs have been remarkably free from illness. Eggs are best when cooked four minutes. This takes away the animal taste that is offensive to some, but does not so harden the white or yolk as to make them hard to digest. An egg, if cooked very hot, is difficult of digestion, except by those with stout stomachs; such eggs should be taken with bread and masticated very finely. An egg spread on toast is food fit for a king, if kings deserve any food that is not a mess of pottage. Fried eggs are less wholesome than boiled ones. An egg dropped into hot water is not only a clean and handsome, but a delicious morsel. Most people spoil the taste of their eggs by adding pepper and salt. A little sweet butter is the best dressing. Eggs contain much phosphorus, which is supposed to be useful to those who use their brain much.'

HOW TO CAN CORN.
First boil fifteen minutes on the stove. This hardens the outside of the grain, so that they may be readily shelled. The grain are to be dried for an hour in the oven, at a moderate heat, or allowed to remain one day spread out in the sunshine. The next step is to salt it just so much as will season it for the table, fill cans with it, leaving half an inch of space; put a lid or so of water in each can, seal up, leaving only an aperture the size of a large pin for the escape of the gas. Place the cans in a hot water kettle, having enough of water in it to reach within half an inch of the top of the cans; then boil moderately three quarters of an hour, and with a drop of saler oil seal up the vent in each can as it is taken from the kettle. Corn prepared and canned in this manner, and set away in a cool place, will keep perfectly sweet and good. To preserve corn on the cob—gather the ears when the grain is fully developed, before they begin to glaze. First soak them an hour in salt pickle, made strong enough to float an egg. Then rise off in clean, cold water, and lay the ears, in warm, clear water, on boards or windows, or over a steady hot steam, drying gradually for ten days, until the grains are shriveled like sugar corn, and all the moisture leached out of the cob. Then all that is required is to pack in wooden boxes and place where there is no dampness, and a slight atmospheric change—When wanted for use soak ten or twelve hours in tepid water, when the grain will be found fairly filled out, and you may have green boiled corn or the cob almost equal to that but an hour from the field.

PROBABILITY.—The Brooklyn Union says: 'Duncan, Sherman & Co. have used up their whole capital in fashionable living. The head of the house, William Butler Duncan, has spent not less than $750,000 per year, his two partners have helped the doubling of that sum. These and other demands of fashion have in ten years expended on this house for an outlay of $2,000,000 gone in a riotous living, for living is riotous when it comes out of innocent parties.'

Who can stand the depots of woman's love? A New Hampshire citizen says of her husband: 'His kick is an inspiration, and when he knocks me down, I feel that my measure of human happiness is full.'

ABOUT SUGAR AND SUGAR CAKES.
The sugar crop of the Sandwich Islands is very promising. The largest yield, known to sugar planters in production there. The cane grows in what is here called Otaheite, or white cane, which grows very luxuriantly in this State, but is tender and does not mature well.
