the Court House to a crowded street. They made a very novel appearance, and attracted universal attention. Some of the hands acted their parts like old stagers. Hundreds of persons remained on the Park grounds until late in the evening, expecting to get a sight of the troupe, notwithstanding the rain. It was not on the programme, but some parties had made arrangements to send up a balloon during the day. An accident of some kind prevented its ascension, and it appears nowhere on the scene, except in the bill of exon the scene, except in the bill of ex-NEW SERIES--VOL. 17, NO. 28.

One of the features we noticed in arranging the grounds in the Park grove was that the dancing platform was larger than the audience-room in front of the speakers platform. We admired the energy displayed on the part of those who like to step to the music of the fiddle. The dancers were the last
