THE REPUBLICAN.
CLEARFIELD, PA.
WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 11, 1879.
THE DEMOCRATIC OUTLOOK.
A TALK WITH HORATIO SEYMOUR—WHY HE POSITIVELY DECLINES OFFICE.

affections of the party which we should not otherwise have had.
It was pointed out long before that he had been Speaker of the Assembly and Governor of New York, and a statesman of recognized influence. He answered: "In those early days I was not a leader but one of the young men on whom the leaders bestowed some marks of their favor. The caucus which named me for Speaker of the Assembly was very closely divided between the Hunkers and Barnburners. The Hunkers adopted me because I was the only one of my number in the Assembly who had any legislative experience. I received three or four more votes than the candidate of the other faction, and as we had all agreed to abide by the result, that settled it. When I was nominated for Governor in 1850, it was not my triumph but the triumph of Marcy and Beardsley, and Bronson, and their friends. They fought for the control of the Convention and when they gained it they thought it would be good policy to put a comparatively unknown man at the head of the ticket, and they happened to select me. This led to my nomination in 1852, when I was elected. During my term the prohibition legislation came up, and the excitement which that engendered compelled me to make some new changes in 1854. But by the time new changes had occurred my old friends Beardsley and Bronson were against me. They differed from me on a question of nominating William L. Marcy for President in 1852. But if Marcy had been the choice of the Democratic Convention, the civil war would have been averted. He would not have gone to the extremes that Pierce went; he would have kept up a better feeling between the North and South. Marcy was a statesman. Gov. Seymour's devotion to Gov. Marcy's fame and memory is noteworthy. It was as a member of Gov. Marcy's staff that Horatio Seymour, a young man, first appeared in public life. To the end of Marcy's life the friendship and affection between them never cooled or diminished. This is the reason, perhaps, why Gov. Seymour treasures and often repeats one of the last remarks that Marcy made to him: "The most difficult duty that a politician has to perform is to retire gracefully from the stage of public life when he is too old to be of any further use."
Gov. Seymour adds: "Appreciating the truth of this remark, I resolved to retire early; and, considering my broken health and advancing years, my friends have no right to feel fault with this decision."
As Horatio Seymour stood before me, tall, graceful, erect, his dark eyes shining, his voice ringing and resonant, I could easily understand why the Democrats of New York were so loth to relinquish his leadership. But from this decision there is no appeal.—New York Sun.

REBEL CLAIMS AND RADICAL FRAUD.
A rare opportunity was offered the stalwarts in Congress a few days ago to give the country a proof of their sincerity in regard to Southern claims. For years the clamors of Republican orators and editors about "rebel claims" have filled the air. Columns of figures have been piled up in their newspapers to show the enormous amounts the Confederates would take from the Treasury in payment of their claims on Congress. Three thousand millions in these claims constituted the lowest estimate of the stalwart Tribune whose columns groaned for months preceding every election with the dismal load. That Democratic majority in Congress has come and the first step of one of its members, General Bragg of Wisconsin, a brave Union soldier, was to move to abolish the "Southern Claims Commission" as an amendment to the civil appropriation bill. Gen. Bragg's object, as he declared in the debate, was to close the payment of fraudulent Southern claims through this commission and at the same time to stop the loyal cry that the Democrats designed to rob the Government. When the vote on this amendment was taken the Republicans of the House under the lead of Gen. Garfield voted in the negative, and the Southern claims commission is preserved through the aid of a few straggling Democratic votes. Had the Republicans voted in accordance with their professions the commission would have been abolished by an overwhelming vote, as nearly all the Democrats supported the amendment of Gen. Bragg.

TROOPS! TROOPS!
The notorious fraud in the White House still insists on sending troops into Pennsylvania for the purpose of controlling elections. There is a clause in our State Constitution like this: "No body of troops in the army of the United States or of this Commonwealth, shall be present, either armed or unarmed, at any place of election within this Commonwealth during the time of election."
The editor of the Better Herald, in alluding to the Washington Frank, says: "That is the law of Pennsylvania, passed too, by a Republican Legislature in 1869, and Mr. Hayes wants to keep in operation a United States law to give him a chance to send his military straps over here during elections on pretence of keeping peace at the polls! But the people won't stand any of his nonsense. The day has gone by for that kind of work. The States are able to keep the peace at their own election polls and any interference by the General Government will be resented. Mr. Hayes and Blaine Chandler and that whole crowd of bloody shirt warriors may as well make up their mind to it now as again. When the people of this country become so demoralized that United States troops must be stationed at the polls, the sooner our form of government is changed the better. No use talking about liberty when we are no longer fit for it."
The CASE SERIALIZED—Chief Justice Sharwood has just delivered a decision of considerable importance, relative to the sale of liquors on election days. Since 1875 there has been a law prohibiting the sale of liquors on election days, but it has been the custom among tavern keepers to open their bars after the polls were closed. An inn-keeper of Norristown was tried for violating the act, in selling liquors after seven o'clock in the evening, and convicted—the Court holding that the "day" spoken of in the act meant a day of twenty-four hours, beginning at midnight election morning, and ending at midnight election night. Another question was raised in the Court below, to wit: that the jury were judges of the law and the facts. The lower Court refused to affirm the proposition that the jury were judges of the law, and the case was carried up for review. The Supreme Court says that the Court below was right in its definition as to what constitutes an election day, but wrong on the second point, and the judgment is therefore reversed.
