A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

THE FAMOUS CAREER OF MARGARET O'NEILL EATON.

HER EARLY LIFE IN WASHINGTON—HOW SHE DISREPUTED AN ADMINISTRATION, MADE A FURIBREND AND OR-TAINED SOCIAL REFORM.

From the Washington Post, Nov. 16th. Mrs. Gen. Eaton died last Saturday at her residence, on Ninth street, after a long illness. Though she had been failing in health for some months, it was only within a few days that alarming symptoms were developed, and it became evident that she could not live long. It is a beautiful woman, and it is a beautiful woman to die. It is a beautiful woman to die. It is a beautiful woman to die.

bility. Caste railed with an iron hand, none the less hard and cold and unbending because affecting to hide its rigid definition of social lines in the velvet glow of a professed democratic philosophy. To sum up, the men were coarse, the women conventional; and freedom of social action, except within certain restricted limits, was as absolute a taboo to the masters as it was a liberty of movement to the slaves of that day. And it was in this society at its hardest, because at its comestly and most unbecomingly that Margaret O'Neill was born, and with whose spirit and holiest circle she waged so long a bitter and stubborn conflict. The odds were all against her. She was handicapped from the start. Her father was a man of ordinary intelligence, and of narrow, practical, and unimagination. His mind was not a fountain of ideas, but a well of facts. He was a man of good judgment, of pure instincts, of well-balanced intellect, and of a heart that was as true as steel. He was a man of good judgment, of pure instincts, of well-balanced intellect, and of a heart that was as true as steel.

Her early life in Washington—how she disreputed an administration, made a furibrend and obtained social reform. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage.

As Margaret O'Neill grew to womanhood, she was educated at Mrs. Haywood's seminary, in Georgetown, and afterwards finished at Mr. Kirk's school, in Washington. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage.

of little else than ways and means by which he might silence the clamors of Mrs. Eaton. He demanded that she be removed from the cabinet, and he demanded that she be removed from the cabinet. He demanded that she be removed from the cabinet, and he demanded that she be removed from the cabinet.

There was a man of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage.

She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage.

She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage.

the care and education of her grandchildren. In a fitting manner she and the possessor of much real estate in this city, she spared no trouble or expense in their education. The style in which she lived after her return from Spain, the sumptuousness of her table, the elegance of her carriage, who even at sixty was still remarkable, are matters of tradition in Washington.

"I have never seen any one so beautiful," says an old resident; "and when she drove out in a carriage with four horses and liveried servants, there was nothing in Washington to compare with her equipage, not even the President's own. She was very gay and fond of display."

Mrs. Eaton in early life united with the Footy Methodist church, and was held in the highest estimation by the members of that congregation. That church was poor when she joined it. Methodism was not then a popular religion, and the church was a small one. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage.

She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage. She was a woman of great spirit and courage, and she was a woman of great spirit and courage.
