LUMBER PHRASES.

That technical writer, Mr. Richard That technical writer, Mr. Richard Grant White, in the Atlantic Monthly for November, gives an article on "Assorted Americanisms," in which he speaks of the use of the word lumber as a perversion of the English word timber, and that this perversion has almost driven the word timber out of use. The Northeceters Lumberman, orbitable at Chicago takes accounting published at Chicago, takes exception to Mr. White's criticism and declares general use among humbermen, and is applied to standing trees, to squared sticks, either sawed or hewed, and to the heavier pieces of wood, whether squared or not, used in the construction of houses, vessels, etc. In the day of pit saws, the word timber was suffi ciently expressive to define the limited product of the primitive manufactur-ers; but with the advent of circular
