A NATURAL WEDDING

There's a wedding in the orchard, dear,
I know it by the flowers;
They're wreathed on every bough and bean
Or falling down in showers. The air is in a mist, I think, And scarce knows which to be— Whether all fragrance, clinging close, Or bird-scag, wild and Iron.

And countless wedding jowsle shine, And golden gifts of grace; I never saw such wealth of son In any shady place. It seems! I heard the fluttering robes Of maidens clad in white, The clasping of a thousand hunds in tenderest delight;
