

A Washington letter writer says: The original Garfield delegate in the Chicago convention arrived in this city on Friday last, and was a distinguished guest at the Mercantile Club. It will be remembered, voted for Garfield first, and all the time, and never once "dipped". This infatuated delegate carries with him two letters received from General Garfield, and also carries with him Garfield's photograph which the General very kindly sent him. This original Garfield delegate's Christian initials are W. A. M., and his surname is Greer. He belongs to Wayne county, Pa. It is not possible at this writing to give a full and correct history of this first, last and all the time Garfield delegate, but we learn that a complete history of his life, virtues and exploits, truthfully taken from authentic sources, will be given in an improved volume, and will be respectively offered for the personal use of his countrymen, as also all others who wish to see human nature in its most finished form. It may not, however, be inappropriate, nor should it be considered exaggeration, to say, that Mr. W. A. M. Greer, the original Garfield delegate, is the son of parents and was born at a very early period in his life. His father was a "male man" and his mother was a "female woman". W. A. M. G. was a very precocious young man and an exceptionally good one. He was a good boy, a very good boy indeed. He was free from the guilt of impaling flies with pins, of pelting frogs with dromedars, of rubbing dirt on his mother's face, and of other such things, and he was a good, precocious youth, and he was better and more precocious as he advanced in age, as his action at Chicago clearly demonstrates. No voice can be so loud to speak, no pen can be so vigorous to write the praises of him who never faltered, but voted first, last and all the time for Garfield.

Two Congressional Committees in 1873 declared that James A. Garfield had committed perjury and had taken a bribe. The Congressional record still remains put down in black and white by his party friends. More: "All the world and the rest of mankind" have been given to understand by the editor of the Cincinnati Commercial that there are three persons who should be treated very coolly by Garfield, viz: Abram S. Hewitt, who expressed the opinion that Garfield wrote the Chinese letter; Jeremiah S. Black, who "pretended to be his friend and finally struck him a shameful blow," and General Hancock, "whose language was unbecomingly an officer and a gentleman." The man who speaks thus for Garfield said that he spoke the day before he was nominated at Chicago: "The chatter about Garfield is absurd and ridiculous. He has no record to run on." In connection with this threatened social ostracism by Garfield of Hewitt, Black and Hancock—a calamity we hope they will be able to survive—nothing is said as to the manner in which Garfield when he becomes President, proposes to treat Luke P. Poland, N. P. Banks and George W. McCrary, the three loyal Republican members of the Poland Committee who said in their report to Congress that Garfield had been guilty of bribe and perjury; nor is anything said of what is in reserve for the editors of all the leading Republican papers in the country, the New York Tribune and the New York Times being conspicuous among them, who endorsed the truth of the Committee's report. Judge Black didn't say anything about Garfield that had not been previously said by his own Republican friends on the Committee acting on their solemn oaths, all of which was concerned in and enforced by the Republican press of the country. If Garfield intends to recognize only those who did not subscribe to the truth of the Poland and Greer reports, his receptions at the White House will be very sparsely attended.

It will be remembered that at the Chicago Republican National Convention the supporters of Blaine, Sherman and all the anti-Garfield elements united upon Garfield, and thus succeeded in defeating Garfield's nomination for a third term—that Blaine at once took the field actively for Garfield, but that Grant and Conkling, with such tools as the Cameron and Logan looked in their tents—that a several days' conference of Radical magnates, including Garfield himself, was held at New York—that Conkling haughtily refused to attend it, though strongly pressed to do so—that the Maine delegate followed, and that then a conference was immediately afterward held at Garfield's home between him, Grant, Conkling, Logan and Old Cameron. After this latter conference Blaine was no more heard of (except in two or three freely arranged speeches), and that Grant and Conkling at once took the lead and personally conducted the Radical campaign, literally working night and day, and traversing every nook and corner of the States of Indiana and New York. Why was this great change in the Radical campaign so suddenly made? At the conference held at Garfield's home Conkling & Co. demanded three specific conditions: First, That the campaign must be turned over to the Grant men, to conduct it from that time on to the end. Second, That the patronage of the Illinois must be distributed solely by Conkling, Cameron and Logan respectively. Third, That Conkling must be consulted in the formation of the Cabinet. Fourth, That Merritt must be turned out of the New York Custom House, and especially must Blaine and all the leading Republicans who took an active part against Grant's nomination be ignored by the incoming administration, in case of Garfield's election, wherever they came in contact with Conkling, Grant, Cameron or Logan. To all these conditions Mr. Garfield agreed. It will therefore be interesting to note future developments. Garfield either must cheat Conkling & Co., or turn his back upon the men who nominated him at Chicago. Grant and Conkling are no compromisers. They will have all or nothing. They will brook no divided affection. The whole power of Garfield's administration must be tuned to third term and Empire or it will be opposed from its inception by Conkling, Grant and their followers.

Penitentiary on Fire. On the morning of November 25—Shortly before noon—the Western Penitentiary was about sitting down to their annual Thanksgiving dinner, one of the wings known as the East Block was discovered in flames. An alarm was quickly given, and the inmates were ordered to their quarters. The building was under a partial guard placed over them. Meanwhile the fire spread rapidly, the entire roof being enveloped in flames, and grace the structure. The inmates were ordered to their quarters.
