THE REPUBLICAN.

CLEARFIELD, PA.
WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 21, 1881.
AN INTERESTING PROBLEM.

The future of the negro in this country, now that circumstances have made him a problem of interest to the people, connected with the industrial economy of the nation, and necessary for the production of some of our most important crops. He can no more be taken out of the country by colonization than he can the Indian. Attempts have been made in that direction—attempts stimulated by genuine philanthropy and benevolence—but they have produced very insignificant results. The Indian will remain on the soil of this Continent until his race passes away; and the negro's future is indissolubly connected with the history of the land in which he now walks as a freeman.

As the negro is a permanent feature here, a pertinent question arises: What part will he be able to take in the future development of the country? Since the termination of the late civil war he has passed into a new condition, and for that change he was totally unprepared by habit, custom, education or natural ability. Neither the individual negro nor his race has ever performed great deeds. He has not shown capacity for molding his fortunes. He has never manifested a comprehension of those great laws which stimulate and control national or individual progress. The savage tribes of the North who plowed Rome and harrowed Greece contained in their individual members and in their several nationalities those elements of advancement which enabled them to appropriate what was good and grand and noble in the systems of the countries which they subdued and settled, and thus soon became a part of the body politic. Not so the negro. He is not in his nature that element which the laws and literature, all the social habits and refined and elevating customs of a country are appropriated by individuals or races, and both raised in the scale of nationality. Africa stands today where she stood when the Goths and Huns first put foot upon the soil of Southern Europe. The negro is the same. His descent is homelike still in all the elements of dependence which constitute essential slavery. Yet the descendants of the hardy savages of the North are among the lords of the earth, and their brain is giving laws and their stout arms are furnishing physical energy to the whole white race.

This is the history of the negro when compared with that of the white man. Still he has his sphere of usefulness, and his future in this country may be made productive of good to himself and the white race if calm judgment and broad philanthropy, not passion and party prejudice, are allowed to lead the movement for his advancement. The condition of the negro cannot be made better by inflammatory appeals to his passions and addresses calculated to widen the breach between him and the white race. The latter's and always will be the governing element in this Republic. The white man will make the laws and shape the social customs of the country, and if the negro is to be bettered in his new condition it must be by the efforts of the white man. In this connection we are glad to chronicle the fact that the best men of the Southern States are speaking to the negroes with good sense and honest frankness in regard to the future that is before them. The future of the negro depends largely upon the white man of the Southern States. In proportion as they are willing to educate, counsel and guide the dependent race will the latter advance and be useful to the nation. The men of the North have proven that they do not understand the negroes of the South, and if they did they are partially disqualified by their temper to guide the tottering footsteps of the freedmen in that path which, properly pursued, would lead them to comfort and happiness. While, therefore, they cannot or will not aid in the true elevation of the negro, let them not hinder those who are attempting to prepare him for a future beneficial alike to the white man, the negro and the nation.—Baltimore Gazette.

THE VICE PRESIDENT.
If there is one man in the country who, next to ex-Senator Conkling, is a subject of perpetual wonderment to himself, it must be the Vice President of the United States. That he should be Vice President, without ever having done anything to deserve the august station, is a first cause for amazement; but that, being Vice President, without inquiring how or why, he should at the very outset prove his prodigious fitness for the station by challenging a conflict with the occupant of the station above him is a fatality which most puzzle him the rest of his life. The most sagacious and experienced politicians sometimes make preposterous mistakes, and this was the mistake that the Vice President and his friend, Mr. Conkling, fell into when they fancied themselves more than a match for the amiable and somewhat irreverent Ohio Congressman, whom the vicissitudes of the struggle for the White House, Mr. Conkling made the blunderer first, and the Vice President with inexplicable fatuity dutifully followed him into it. The administration, of which he was a nominal member, was not a month old before he was its open and active enemy. President Garfield had hardly entered the White House before he encountered a truculent enemy in the person of Mr. Arthur assuming to control his policy and dictate his nominations. How swiftly things change! At that time Mr. Conkling was the giant athlete of the Republican party, and it was thought that all who trod in his footsteps marched to victory. Now Mr. Conkling is only an attorney-at-law, incapable of helping himself, much less his friends, while the amiable and irreverent Ohio member of Congress, whom they thought to subdue to their arrogant control, is surrounded with a popularity that it has been the fortune

AGRICULTURAL.

THE BEST way to preserve manure is to haul it to the field on which it is needed as fast as it accumulates. Have a wagon or sled always ready on which to throw the manure as it accumulates and haul it out when there is a good load and spread it at once. This is the latest approved plan.

A little attention paid to the wagons may possibly save a break-down, and perhaps a limb, if not a life, and save the hindrance of many hours when one can ill afford it. It is a good maxim: "A stitch in time saves nine," and if that stitch is properly timed it will not only save nine, but the cost of nine times nine. It is a good time to get up the wood and have it cut and properly housed.

The successful farmer does nothing for a livelihood but farm. If he has money, he invests it in a way that will improve his farm. He informs himself as to his business and goes to work in an intelligent manner. Upon such farms no weeds stand as high as a man's head, nor are fences neglected, buildings dilapidated, implements left exposed to the weather, and stock unsheltered and uncared for, but everything denotes thrift and enterprise.

Pure seeds and pure breeds are in the line of improvement. Mules and crosses are not. Never mix distinct species or races or breeds with the hope of improvement. Never mix the inferior with the inferior in the attempt to breed up. Take up no cross in this field with the hope of exerting the best point on either parent. Never mix dissimilar varieties, and only mix any varieties in the hope of uniting the best points in both, as the fine quality in one with the earliness in the other, or productiveness with vigor, or causing some other desirable ends to meet.

WHEN TO PRUNE TREES.
James Redpath, horticulturist of Buchanan county, Iowa, has made an experiment to determine the time of year at which wounds made at pruning are covered the best and most speedily. A branch one inch in diameter was cut from an old apple tree of a well-known variety on the first day of each month in the year, and at the end of five years, when all were laid over, they were opened and found to have decayed the least in those cut in February and March, (just before the swelling of buds), and most in those cut in June and July, (during the growing season), while those pruned during the latter season had the advantage of being closed one year the earliest. A similar experiment was made with the yellow bell-flower, and at the end of four years all the trees cut were healed over; on opening the places where the pruning had occurred, the same result was found, except a slight difference in favor of February and March. In these experiments the decay of summer pruning was about three times as extensive as from that resulting in the winter months. Root pruning for dwarfing always rains the constitution of the tree.

HEALTH OF FARMERS.
Agriculture should be the most ennobling of all vocations. It would be if farmers cultivated the earth as teachers develop the head, and preachers educate the heart. Our teachers and preachers aim to train the thoughts and feelings to truth and love, to utility and happiness. Farmers should train the earth to produce such crops and fruits, and such only, as are conducive to the best health and highest welfare of human beings. Then would their calling be transformed from one of degrading drudgery and interminable toil to one of refinement and luxury. The germinating seeds, the waving grains, the luscious fruits, so suggestive of the source of all life and all blessing, and the harvest season, so typical of a resurrection and immortality, ought to make the life of an agriculturist a continual pastime. And this would be the farmer's life, if farming was managed as it should be.

Farmers have unequalled natural advantages for health, strength, and longevity. The statistics of disease and the tables of mortality, however, are against them. This is not due to their vocation, but to the misuses of it. No class, as a whole, is probably so utterly reckless of health conditions. So far as our acquaintance with the habits of farmers is concerned—and it has been extensive—it compels the conclusion that, as a rule, the dietetic habits of farmers are worse than those of that class who have the means of choosing for themselves. Fried dishes several times a day, with several fried articles at each of the three meals, is one of their common dietetic abominations; dried beef, old cheese, and pickles, are among the common relishes, while lard and salted meats their richer dainties infectious and caustic. We have seen on a farmer's table, fried pork, fried eggs, fried potatoes, and fried griddle-cakes for breakfast; fried ham, and fried hominy, and parsnips for dinner, and fried sausages and fried doughnuts for supper—all the frying done in lard. No class is so troubled with cancer, erysipelas, tumors, cancers, and humors, as farmers; and the excessive use of pork, lard, fine flour, rich cakes, and greasy pastry, are enough to account for it. In dietetic habits, our farmers are sadly misled by the agricultural journals, nearly all of which pander to the prejudices and flatter the morbid appetites by recommending and commending swine-breeding and pork-eating, while they fill their kitchen cabinets with recipes for making rich and palatable puddings, pies, cakes, and other complicated dishes, which no stomach ever carried into a human body could long tolerate without death or dyspepsia.

The essential need of farmers is plain, wholesome food, properly cooked. This would give much more available power for work, relieve them of many of the distresses and expenses of sickness, add many years to their life, and render old age "green" and normal, instead of dry and decrepit, as it is in most cases under existing habits. We recommend to their study such works as Hydropathic Cook Book, Hygienic Hand-Book, Fruits and Farinaceous, and Miss Colman's articles on "Seasonable Diet," etc.—The Science of Health.
