THE LEBANON ADVERTISER.---A FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

DEAR FRIENDS-another year has fied To Time's still regions of the dead ; And I, THE CARRIER Boy, have come To greet you in your cheerful home : I greet you ! for a bright NEW YEAR This day is born the world to cheer. Time's rapid car again has run His annual course around the sun-And left for the historic page Another cycle of the age.

Prosperity hath marked the year! That heaven was kind doth well appear : It hath sent down the timely rain, And filled our barns with golden grain. With all the nations we'er at peace-O may such friendship never cease l And may our praise to God arise, And swell like incense to the skies l Now Patrons we'll the PAST review Before we enter on the NEW.

Is there a soul beneath the starry heavon That ever can forget old Fifty-seven ? lllustrious year! his mighty deeds, though past, Forever in our memories will last. Not deeds alone have stamped their image here, And left their traces on the vanished year; But passive weakness, virtue, vice and wrong To Fifty-seven verily belong. Of these I'll sing around your hearths to-day; O Muse assist me with my humble lay !

The world's a stage ; so sings the tragic bard, Sweet Avon's Swan whom all the world regard; And all the men are actors, as in show ; Yet only as it were-not really so. The scene is over and the actors leave, The quasi death the lookers on don't grieve; The quasi blood is water colored red, The sight of which makes only children dread. But on the world's great stage what's red is blood, Oft swelling in a human, gory flood. O human woe !---my thoughts to India turn, And for her crimes my passions fiercely burn. The cursed Sepoy, cowardly and base, Has proved himself the meanest of his race: Lays ruthless hands on lovely English girls; And children's heads like spinning top he whirls. With hellish lust bears off the English dame, And ere a brutal death, compels her shame! And Sahib with ten demons in his crown, Hell fire breathing, leads his devils on. "Mid lusty fight the noble Saxon falls, He bravely yields, and for no quarter calls; And shouts, before in death he shuts his eyes, "Long live the Queen !"-and so the Briton dies. The slaughter spreads, and cries to heaven ascend ; Earth hears the groans which mortal hearts do rend. The sacred Ganges' rapid eddying flood Rolls its fierce waters dyed with English blood. But ha! at last the retribution comes, Bright hope again returns to English homes: The sons of Britain desperate with rage Rush to the conflict, with one heart engage. The walls of Delhi crumble to the ground, The cannons roar-earth trembles at the sound : Sulphurious smoke in clouds to heaven aspires, Like the dark pillars of volcanic fires : The thunders cease-the British have the town ; And shouts succeed-shouts for the English crown ! And once again the Hindoo stands in awe And cows beneath the stern Brittanic law. May Saxon rule in India ever reign, And human blood that land no longer stain l The world in Fifty-seven's been a stage, Of motley actions-wonders of the age. Withdraw the curtain and the scene survey, All tribes presented in the wondrous play: Behold how nations for great conquests strive, Behold how nations do together live. Then from the dark confusion of the East Look back and view the glories of the West : And with her glory not forget her shame, That clings betimes to an illustrious name : Kind Patrons, I rejoice with you to-day Our nation lives-our proud America ! Her flag with one and thirty blazing lights Waves every sea, declaring human rights. The Union lives! (without it is no life,) Though demagogues keep up perpetual strife. It lives : though greedy parasites of fame, With gorgon throats, on niggers' rights declaim. It lives : though Southern fire-eaters swear : "We'll split the Union !" (Do it if you dare ! 'Tis not so easy split, you smallish fry; No less the danger if you all should die. A little dog barked fiercely at the Moon. Still fiercer barked, and still the Moon went on. The puppy died and in the grave was laid, But still the Moon was just as much alraid. So perish demagogues, both North and South : The nation will but mourn the loss of mouth. Ah! when beneath your parent clods you're laid, Your names will rot, your memory will fade.) But while such apes of statesmen curse the state. Above them tower the patriotic great. Their words and deeds will bide the wreck of time, Their glory rise to Heaven's ethereal clime. Such worthies the departed year has known, Whose noble acts with splendid light have shone. There at the helm stands Pennsylvania's son, The man who fairly all his laurels won. His advent was the gift of gracious Heaven, The crowning glory of old Fifty-seven. When tempest lowered and frowned the nation's fate God sent the Man to guide the ship of State. He took his stand-and freedom-shriekers blushed To see how soon the "Kansas war" was crushed. The nation's motto-"Regnant Populi"-With fire emblazoned on our civil sky. Has been the pole-star of the patriot Man To lead our country in the nation's van.

So father Time with beard a foot in length, And staff in hand to bear his failing strength, Went slyly to the Schate hall and said : "O Douglas, make a speech before I'm dead !". The "little Giant" of the West looked round. Quito startled at the low sepulchral sound: Lol there stood Chronos venerable with age, With hoary locks, and looking very sage : His sunken eyes and pallid cheeks looked death : His frame was worn, and shook at every breath. "Soon I'll be gone :" the old man muttered low, "O Douglas, Douglas, do not answer no!" And then he vanished in the open air, And none but Douglas knew that he was there. So he bethought him. Now the Message came, And Douglas thought it was a little lame; So up he jumps, declares he'll make a speech ; That Buck is wrong he will the Senate teach. But, warned, he reads the Message first himself, Before he heeds the old and shriveled elf ; And finds the Reader did'nt "mind his stops"--"Confound the Clerk ! I ought to break his chops !" And so he works with patriotic might, To show the world that Buck is almost right. The hall is filled to hear the Lion roar, And loud applauses on his head they pour. For People's rights the Statesman roars away; Nor ceases till he's made it clear as day. Now listen to this lie,-there is no greater-That "Douglas to his party has turned traitor!" Great Cæsar ! What would be the Giant's fate Among the "Woollies ?"-He would sufficate !

Kind Patrons, I-would sing of Utah land, Of Brigham and his wedded female band; But lest I weary you with prosy rhymes, I leave the Mormons with their lust and crime; Not doubting that the youngster Fifty-eight Will set the Prophet and his people straight.

And now the "Panic," with its tales of wve-I 'most forgot. Our borough does not know What "panic" means, except an old maid's fright, When by a screech owl she's awaked at night. But Carrier-boy is always with the times, And he can tell you in his New Year rhymes What panic means and how the panic rose, Which in our specie borough no one knows. I'd tell you: Friends, there is a thing called MONEY, And men do make it fast as bees make honey. And faster have they made it for some years, (Too fast they've spent it, as it plain appears.) If all were money what we money call, So many "rich" would not so lowly fall. But real money men do not regard, Because, they say, it's too confounded hard. And copper, gold and silver-all the metals-They deem as bad for 'change as copper kettles. So when they get some money-real stuff, They poke it in the bank-as safe enough. The long faced banker gives his dealers notes ; The dealers trust the long face-silly shoats ! The bank gets rich ; wide spreads its paper fame, And every body else gets rich-in name. The money-house expands-"High price for rags !" And farmers gather up their worn-out bags; And whoa-ge-ep to the paper mill they go-Their bags are turned to currency, you know. So things went on until the banks became A paper house, and shop of cursed game; Inflated like an air balloon-behold !

Three weeks ago the nation's mighty men, The people's choice, assembled once again. The Old Year would not let the "lions" go-Jealous of his fame-without a speech or so.

The people thought the swelling was of gold. But ha! 'twas only paper, chesp as gas-Now every dealer thinks himself an ass! But ah ! too late; why did'nt he think at first, Before he saw the mighty bubble burst? Now comes the woe-hopes builded high in air Fall headlong down, and strike men to despair. The hard-earned coin of laborers has fl. d-The pious banker o'er the sea has sped !

But while the chartered rag-shops of the land Are washed away like houses built on sand, The Bank of Lebanon still stands secure, And for her hills can pay the simon-pure.

And now I'll sing about our noble town-This homely theme can best my ballad crown:

The Advertiser in its old way goes, Discharging thunder on its battling foes : So hard it fought with Ism's brawling Press, That, like hard workmen, it needed another dress. It got one too! Behold how well it fits, And all the papers in the borough beats ! Our pretty sheet with Democratic might, For truth has fought-for truth will ever fight !

Some folks a broad say we are dreadful dutch, In onward march-as cripple on a crutch ! And "dutch, and "dum," and "stereotyped" they use (For one idea) our people to al use. They say our side walks are a mass of pitch (Which in a rustic's eyes is very rich ;) That ladies never can go out at night, Unless the Moon is shining big and bright, And that we have no enterprise-no pride, And in improvements run at-oyster-stride! Let such he gone !- Let Fifty-seven show That Lebanon's no longer dull and slow : Behold our streets; there's Dutchy with his mall; And Pat with mattock beats his species all. The pavements, from uptearing bad enough, Will soon be made of quite a different stuff; And twelve feet wide, that ladies extra fine Have room enough to sweep their crinoline. And then the Gas, which mocks the light of sun, Itself alone has half the battle won; For should the ladies stick in mud to knee The blessed consolation is-they see. And need I mention Railroad ? Telegraph ? Three years ago the names made people laugh. And now we go like lightning on a rail (See Advertiser-Stage coach is for sale.) So hold your peace, calumniators witty, A few more years-we'll have a noble city ! With this good-morning friends, and New Year's joy, CARRIER BOY! The hearty wishes of the
