Orleans and Memphis, with which I will close. My attention was first attached to the immense valley which stretches its fortile and broad but undulating plains, varied by overy form of rural and agricultural beauty by that Hon. and veteran member of the logal profession, James M. Porter, of Easton, when he was Judge of this District of Easten, when he was Judge of this District many years ago. Ho was dilating on its numer-ons advantages as a railroad route, and prophe-cying; its eventual prosperity in a conversation with my father, who had been a companion of his during some of their earlier years. He said he had traced it North as fareas Maine, although of course its Northern brundary lost the bold and most 'pecfiltar fastures which mark it in its course thro' Notthern New Jersoy, Contral Pennsylvania and 'Virginia, Eastorn Tennessee, and its final termi-Nothern New Jersoy, Central Pennsylvania and Virginia, E.storn Tennessee, and its final termi-nation at the northernmost junction of the boun-daries of Mississippi and Alabama. He spoke of it in the decided way peculiar to all the mem-bers of his family, so distinguished in the history of Pennsylvania, both as to its geograph-ical and commercial importance, and as destined to contain eventually the most numerous and thriving population of Tentonic origin, in the United States, except the valley of the Mississip-si and its tributeries. That prediction is fast falsi and itsetributaries. That prediction is fast ful and and its tributaries. That prediction is fast ful-filling by the gradual emigration of the Ger-man farmers of Pennsylvania, southward forming a population, who liberalized by one or two conturies of moderate prosperity un-der free institutions, still retain the virtues for which "Das Vaterland" is famed. A similar process has been more rapid in, and equally ben-eficial to the eastern shore of Maryland, although the field bein slimited it her second granged of the field being limited, it has escaped general ob-servation, as fur as I know. From that day Te this whenever a fact came to my notice relat-ing to this subject, nntil I not only be-came convinced of the absolute truth of Judge Forter's deductions, but also, that this val-ley was only of inferior, if not of equal or superior importance, in a politic economic point of view, to the prosperity and safety of the Union, than the valley of the Mississippi. For after all, as many a vaporing politician has found to his cost, as long as the industrial inter-vests of this nation are beneficial to the North and South, to an extent which is of appreciable im-portance, although in a moment of excitoment lo-cal masses or even whole states may resolve North or South, in a momentary fury to dissolve the Union, cooler reflection dismisses the instigators to deserved obligion. This will continue until the preliminary questions of our youthful exis-tence as a nation are sottled, and our foreign and tence as a metion are southed, and our foreign and internalipolicy assume the fixed character which shall then distinguish us as a people. The time to fix the industrial connection of the great states, through which this chain of rail-roads was nearly finished as a final fact, is at hand. The Jackson and Missīssippi Railroad which starts at New Or-leans connects at Tueaumbic with the great Santh leans connects at Tuscumbia with the great South differently named as sections of it have been coustructed under various charters according to the sowas or natural features of the country which it connects, or passes through. This terminates at Richmond, Va. The Manasa Gap Road which (as I understand Gov. Wise's letter to me in re-ply to one asking him for information as to railroads completed, undertaken, and chartered, which would form this route,) connects with this last mamed road, by charter, and now completed from

The road would now pass eastward of the Blue Ridge a Harper's Ferry, and thence proceed in a gener-ally South Eastern direction to Richmond, from whence its course would be again toward the South-west, but with a westerly inclination greater than the general direction of the Kehta-toning Valley. The map will show that by continuing the construction of the nocce-sary railroads, from Winchester via Stanton to Salem on the great South Western Road, a distance of 196 miles, many hundred miles will be saved. I am informed that the face of the country is similar to its appearance in this neighbor-hood, through which there was no topographical difficulty in constructing the Lebahon Valley Reilroad. It is a broken but not a difficult country.
