Great Discovery of the Age. Ex IMPORTANT TO TOBACCO CHEWERS

Dr. Gustav Linnard's Taste Restorative Troches, the Great Substitute for Tobacco T is a well known and incontrovertable fact that the Use of Tobacco is the promoting cause of man of the most severe Mental and Physical Disorders to which the race of man is subject, as careful analysis and long and painful experience have clearly proven that it contains certain narcotic and poisonous properfies most dangerous in their effects, which by entering into the blood derange the functions and operations of the Heart, causing many to suppose that organ to be seriously diseased.

TOBACCO affects also the entire nervous system; manflesting itself—as all who have ever used the moxions

While reading recently an account of the fright-

While reading recently an account of the frightful massacre of several white families by the Black-foot Indians, we were reminded of a thrilling event which occurred in the "Wild West," a short time subsequent for the Revolution, in which a highly accomplished young lady, the daughter of a distinguished officer of the Amer-land of Independence—and a gentleman who had all ways stood high in the osciem of his associates ican army, played an important part. The story being of a most thrilling nature, and exhibiting in a striking manner the "Perils of the Border." we have concluded to give an extract from it, as we have concluded to give an extract from it, as originally published, as follows:

The angle on the right bank of the Great Kanawha, formed by its junction with the Ohio, is called Point Pleasant; and is a place of historical note. Here, on the 10th October, 1774, during what is known as Lord Dunmore's War, was lought one of the fiercest and most desperate battles that ever took place between the Virginians and their forest foes.

and the young man already described—Eugene Fairfax, the secretary of Blanche's father—at once stepped forward, and, in a polite and deferential manner, offered his hand to the different females, to assist them on board. The hand of Blanche was the last to touch his—and then but slightly, as she sprung quickly and lightly to the deck—but a close observer might have detected the slight flush which mantled his noble, expressive features as his eye for a single instant met hers. She might herself have seen it—perhaps she did—but there was no corresponding glow on her own bright, pretty face, as she inquired, in the calm, dignified tone of one having the right to the question, and who might also have been aware of the equality of position between herself

"Eugene, is corrything prepared for our depar-ture? It will not do for our boat to spring a leak again, as it did coming down the Kunawha-for it will not be safe for us. 'I hope we understand our duty better, Colonel,' said one of the men, respectfully.

'I doubt it not,' replied the commander of the Point; 'I holive you are all faithful and true men or you would not have been selected by the agent of Colonel Bertrand, for taking down more precisions freight than you over carried before; but still the wirest and the best of men have lost their lives by giving our to the most carnest anneals of the wrest and the best of men have lost their lives by giving ear to the most earnest appeals of humanity. You understard what I mean?—White men, apparently in the greatest distress, will hail your boat, represent themselves as having just escaped from the Indians, and bog of way for the love of God in the most nitease to reserve ing just escaped from the most piteons tones to come to their relief; but turn a doff out to them—to each and all of them—even should you know the pleaders to be of your own kin; for inknow the pleaders to be of your own kin; for in such a case your own brother might deceive you not wilfully and voluntarily, perhaps—but because of being goaded on by the savages, them selves concealed. Yes, such things have been known as one friend being thus used to lure another to his destruction; and so be cautious, vigulant, brave and true, and may the good God keep.

Bertrand had lost much, and suffered much; through British invasion; and when, shortly af-ter the close of the war, he had met with a few more serious reverses, he had been fain to accept a grant of land, near the Falls of the Ohio, now Louisville, tendered him by Virginia, which then held jurisdiction over the entire territory now constituting the State of Kentucky.

The grant had decided the Colonel upon seeking his new possessions and building up a new home in the then Far West, and as his wife had insisted upon accompanying him on his first tour, he had assented to her dosire, on condition that Blanche wholeh be left among her friends will such time as a place could be prepared which might in some degree be considered a fit abode for one so carefully and tenderly reared.

Blanche would gladly have gone with her parents; but on this point her father had been in excrable—declaring that she would have to reexorable—declaring that she would have to re-main at the East till he should see proper to send for her; and as he was a man of positive charac-

ten, and a rigid disciplination, the matter had been settled without argument. When Colonel Bertrand removed to the West, When Colonel Bertrand removed to the West, Eugene Fairfax, as we have seen, accompanied him; and coming of age shortly after, he had accepted the liberal offer of his noble benefactor, to remain with him in the capacity of private secrety and confidential agent. On talking possession of his grant, the Colonel had almost immediately erected a fort, and offered such inducements to settlers as to speedily sellect around him quite a little community—of which, as a matter of course, he became the head and chief; and to supply the wants of his own family and others, and increase marts, which goods were transported by land over the mountains to the Kanawha, and thence by water to the Falls of the Ohio, whence their removal to Fort Bertrand became an easy matter. To purchase and ship these goods, and deliver a package of letters to friends in the East, Eugene had been thrice dispatched—his third commission also extending to the escorting of the beautiful heiress, with her servants, to her new home.— This last commission had been so far executed at the time chosen for the opening of our story, as to bring the different parties to the mouth of the great Kanawha, whence the reader has seen them nearly four o'clock, when, as Blanche was standing on the fore part of the deck gazing at the lovely scene which surrounded her, she saw a seemingly flying body suddenly leave a timb of a gigantic tree, (whose mighty branches extended far ovor the river, and near which the boat was then swayed by the action of the current), and alight with a crash upon the deck of the boat, not more than eight feet from her. One glauce sufficed to show her what the object was, and to freeze the blood in her yeins. The glowing eyes of a huge parther met her gaze. The suddenness of the shock which this discovery gave her was of the shock which this discovery gave her was overpowering. With a deafening shrick she fell upon her knees and clasped her hands before her breast. The panther crouched for his deadly leap, breast. The panther crouched for his deadly leap, but ere he sprang, the hunting knife of Eugene Fairfax (who, with the steersman, was the only person on deck besides Blanche), was buried to the hilt in his side, inflicting a severe but not fatal wound. The infuriated beast at once turned tipod Eugene, and a deadly struggle onsued. But it was a short one. The mulished blade of ed upon Eugene, and a deadly struggle onsued. But it was a short one. The polished blade of the knife played back and forth like lightning flashes, and at every plunge it was buried to the hilt in the panther's body, who soon fell to the deck, dragging the dauntless Eugene with him. On seeing her protector full, Blanche uttered another ships and what she was the said whe said the panther of the said who resident and the said who have the said who are the said w On seeing her protector full, Blauche uttered an-other shrick and rushed to his aid; but assistance from stouten arms was at hand. The boatmen gathered round, and the savage monster was lit-erally hacked in pieces with their knives and hatchets, and Eugene, covered with blood, was dragged from under his carcass. Supposing him to be dead or mortally wounded, Blanche threw her arms around his neck and gave way to a passionate burst of grief. But he was not dead — he was not even hurt, with the exception of a few slight scratches. The blood with which be was covered was the panther's not his own. But Blanche's embrace was his—a priceless treasure—an index of her beart's emotions and affections. seen in the progress of our story.

Slowly and silently, save the occasional creak, dip, and plach of the steursman's our, the boat of our voyagers was borne along upon the bosom of the current, on the third night of the voyage.— The hour was waxing late, and Eugene, the only one astir except the watch, was suddenly startled by a rough hand being placed upon his shoulder, accompanied by the words, in the graff voice of he boatman:

ne boatman:
"I say, Cap'n; here's trouble!"
"What is it, Dick?" inquired Eugene, starting to his feet.

"Don't you see thar's a heavy fog rising, that'll soon kiver us up so thick that we won't be able to tell a white man from a nigger?" replied the boatman—Dick Winter by name—a tall, bony, muscular, athletic specimen of his class. "Good heaven! so there is!" exclaimed Eugene, looking off upon the already misty waters. "It must have gathered very suddenly, for all was clear a minute age. What is to be done now? This is something I was not prepared for, such a night as this." "It looks troublous, Cap'n I'll allow," returned Dick:" but we're in for't that's sartin, and I s'pose we'll have to make the best on't."

"But what is to be done?—what do you advise?" asked Eugene, in a quick, excited tone, that indi-cated some degree of alarm. "Why, of you war'nt so skeered about the young lady, and it warn't so dead again the orders from head quarters, my plan would be a cl'ar and casy one—I'd just run over to the Knintuck shore, and "No, no," said Eugene, positively; "that will never do, Dick-that will never do! I would not

"Ef you can," reloined the boatman; "but when it gits so dark as we can't tell one thing fram t'other, it'll be powerful hard to do; and ef we don't run again a bar or bank afore morning, in spite of the best o' us, it'll be the luckiest go that ever I had a hand in. 'No one feels more concerned about the safe passage of Miss Betrand than myself,' replied Eugene, in a deferential tone; "and since our arrival here, I have left nothing undone that I thought might possibly add to her security and "I see! Saying this, Eugené hastened below, where he found the other boatmen sleeping so soundly as to require considerable effort, on his part to wake them. At last, getting them fairly roused, he informed them, almost in a whisper, for he did not care to disturb the others, that a heavy fog had suddenly arisen, and he wished their presence on deck, immediately. deck, immediately.
"A fog, Cap'n?" exclaimed one, in a tone which indicated that he comprehended the peril with ity for waking the others, and having a scene.

Up! and follow me, without a word!"

He glided back to the deck, and was almost immediately joined by the bostmen, to whom he briefly made known his bones and fears.

They thought, like their companion, that the boat would be safest if made fast to an overhanging limb of the Kentucky shore; but frankly admitted that this could not be done without diffi culty and danger, and that there was a possibili 'Then make that possibility a certainty, and it shall be the best night's work you ever perform ed!' rejoined Eugene, in a quick, excited tone. At this moment Eugene heard his name pro-nounced by a voice that seldom failed to excite a peculiar emotion in his breast, and now sent a peculiar emotion in his breast, and now sent a strange thrill through every nerve; and hastening below, he found Blanche, fully dressed, with a light in her hand, standing just outside of her cabin, in the regular passage which led length-wise through the center of the boat.

"I have heard something, Eugene," she said "emongh to know that we have met with an accident, but not sufficient to fully comprehend its nature."

A TALE OF TERROR.

The following rather marvellous story is told. by one of the Vienna journals:

"As a farmer of Orsinovi, near that city, was returning from market, he stopped at a road-side public house, and imprudently showed the innkeeper a large sum of money which he had received. In the night the inn-keeper, armed with a nonigrd, stole into the furmer's chamber, and prepared to stab him; but the farmer, who, from the man's manner at supper, conceived suspicion of foul play, had thrown himself, fully dressed, on the bed without going to sleep, and being a you; but I, who am without a lover, am free to powerful man, he wrested the poniard from the say that this young man has beautiful eyes." other; and using it against, laid him dead at his feet. A few moments after, he heard stones thrown at the window, and a voice which he recognized as that of the innkeeper's son, said:

"The grave is ready !" A WIFE COMPRESSED INTO A RING.

A certain Russian noble, who lately visited Paris, was noticed to be constantly plunged into deep sadness. He wore on his finger a very re markable ring, large enough for a bracelet, and extended over his hand like a buckler for the ring finger. It was of a greenish color, and was traversed by red veins. It attracted the attention of everybody, but no one was bold enough to in-

"This jewel, madam," he continued, "is my wife. I had the misfortune to lose her some years since, in Russia. She was an Italian, and dreaded the coy bed which awaited her after this from the path of virtue, above all petty feelings. life. I carried her remains to Germany, where I was acquainted with a celebrated chemist whom I directed to make of the body a solid substance which I could always carry about me. Eight days afterward he sent for me, and showed me the empty coffin, a horrid collection of instruments and alembics. This jewel was lying on a compressed that which was my wife into this jewel, which shall never more leave me.
