AN HOUR IN THE DEAD LET-TER OFFICE. A female correspondent of Life Illustrated give the following account of a visit to the Dead Letter Office at Washington :

We had been fortunate enough to procure the rtree to this place through special favor and induence, although, as a general thing, no visitors are admitted. It was a large, light room, with two or three desks, at which were seated aged officers in silent occupation among literal drifts of letters. The walls were lined on every side with buge mail sacks which bad been returned full of inclaimed epistles, from myriads of post offices; there might have been fifty or a hundred of these sacks, and each probably contained thousands on thousands of letters!

"How rapidly you dispose of them !" said I. satching the speed with which the clerks tore nense heap of opened letters at their feet. "It's all in habit, ma'am," said the gentleman nearest me. "We are accustomed to open a certain number daily, and to those who do not understand the expedition and accuracy with which we work, it would seem, indeed, almost incredihle."

As he spoke, a tiny gold ring rolled from the evidently written over by a delicate female hand. "A obi.d's ring," he said, taking it up; "would you like to look at it, ma'am ?"

"What will you do with it?" I inquired, reurning the ring to his care.

"We lay all such things aside, in case they should be called for." "And are they often redeemed ?"

"Not often-not once in a hundred instances," he replied, taking a little gold dollar from beneath the scal of another letter, and laying it carefully under the desk.

We stood in silence, regarding the pile of open ed letters, which was growing higher with every moment. It was a strange medley of styles and handwriting. Some were inscribed on huge this wonderful preparation, he would defy the sheets of foolscap, in a manner that conveyed the impression to your mind that the writer must have grasped his pen with both hands, and gone at the paper as he would dig a spade into the earth, and folded with a glorious disregard to all tions credulity of the Indians, and in their eager | geometrical precision; others again were daintily desire to obtain the valuable secret, the request of written on colored tissue paper, and some were in that casy, flowing hand, that bespeaks energy Macpherson set off to the woods under a strong and refinement of character in the calligrapher. A weaver of Speyer, in Germany, recently per formed an exploit, which casts the dexterity of our Travis or Suydom completely in the shade,-He was the father of a fine boy, an affectionate husband, and known as the best rifle shot in the district ; but let a man be a saint, and chance to excel in some one thing, and he is sure to have enomies without humber. One day while the reaver sat smoking in the bar-room of a small inn, tome of those mean characters approached him and commenced bantering him upon his accuracy of aim. At first he treated their remarks, as mere jokes; but their pertinacity at length vercame his good humor, and in a towering pasion he started for home, determined to give undeniable proof of his superiority, or perish in the attempt. According he called his little boy, a ad of twelve years old, informed him that he had 'a charmed rifle ball," and could not fail to strike any mark, at the same time ordered him to place any ordinary sized potatos upon his head, and stand at the foot of a long alley, while he shot it off. The child fully imbued with the superstition inculcated by the stories he heard, did not hesitate to obey the command, and the marksman fired, cutting the vegetable in two pieces and leaving him without a scratch. Overyjoyed at the success of his experiment, the weaver return-

DESTROYING THE ROMANCE A capital story is told of a young fellow, who,

one Sunday, strolled into a village church, and, during the service, was electrified by the sparkle of a pair of brilliant black eyes, which were rivicted upon his face. After the service, he raw the possessor of the witching orbs leave the church alone; and emboldened by her glances, he ventur. ed to follow her, his beart aching with rapture. He saw her look behind, and fancied she evinced some emotion at recognizing him. He then quickened his pace, and she actually slackened hers, as if to let him come up with her; but we will permit the young gentleman to tell the rest in his own way: "Noble young creature," thought I; "her artless and warm heart is superior to the bonds of custom.

"I reach within a stone's throw of her. She suldenly balted, and turned her face towards me. My heart swelled to bursting. I reached the spot where she stood. She began to speak, and I took off my hat as if doing reverence to an an. gel. "'Are you a peddler ?'

"'No, my dear girl that is not my occupation."

"Well, I don't know,' continued she, not very when I saw you in the meeting-house, that you ain't sure but you're the good-for-nothing raseal, after all.""

A REMARKAPLE FAMILY .--- We mentioned some time ago, that the wifs of Mr. Mahlon Houck, of Robeson township, had given birth to triplets, or three living children, all boys, and that the babes and their mother were doing well. The children, now over four months old, continue well and healthy, and bid fair to grow up to manhood togother. "From one of the letters," he said, "I thought the lady might feel interested in it."

It was a single curl of golden hair tied with a bit of pink ribbon, and wrapped in a little piece of paper on which was written "Baby's hair." I knew the history of that letter in an instant, though I had never looked on its folds, I could see the fair young mother parting the sunny tresses from the infant head, and placing it, with half a smile and half a tear. within the closely written page that was to glad the heart of the far away husband. And ke never received the letter. Perhaps he died under the mighty shadow of the Sierra Nevada ; perhaps the turf of some Mississippi valley lay close on his pulseless heart, while she, the faithful wife, was growing more sad, less bopeful with every day that brought no answer ing word. "Baby's hair !" I could not bear that the bright curl should be thrown carelessly among the host of letters; it seemed like desceration.

"Muy I keep this little lock?" "Certainly, if you like."

And I placed it carefully in my reticule, with tender hand. I know not where the sorrowing young mother's heart is breaking, day by day,

"Where do all these letters go when they have been opened and examined ? Are they burned ?" "No; that was formerly the custom, however. We used to make great bunfires of them, but aside from the fact that bits of written papers would always escape from the flames, thus destroying all privacy in the letters, it was found that many people made it a business to seek among the ashes for the gold, jewels, dollars, etc., which often escape our notice here, and go out in the opened letters. So now they are all sent to a paper mill and re-manufactured as writing pa-
