I did not lose a moment running down to his house and offering what little sympathy and assistance it was in my power to bestow; and of course, took upon myself to do whatever was necessary upon so sad an occasion. The young widow was terribly cut down, and at such a distance from her own friends and relations, secured more than usually forlorn. We did all we could to relieve her uffliction, and after the funeral had taken place, succeeded in enlming her grief to some

I then took the liberty of inquiring a little, and discovered that my poor friend with a carclessness which was too characteristic of him had involved himself considerably in debt to furnish is house for his young wife's comfort, having purchased every article of their household goods n credit. This matter I undertook to arrange for her, and, by going round amoung the various creditors, persuaded the most of them to take their goods back by my paying them a small percentage for their trouble in placing and fixing. This however, required the outlay of a couple of hundrad dollars, the funeral expenses were one hundred and fifty more, and she had not twenty dollars in the world toward it.

The next morning, therefore, saw me at John Wolfe's store; he had just returned from a business tour South, and was quite shocked to hear of his book keeper's de th. I briefly related to him the situation which the young wife had been left in, and the arrangements I had made with creditors and waited his answer. "Call as you go home this evening," said be,

"and I will attend to it. I am very busy just now."

When I called in the evening, he handed me a letter for the widow, and begging me to let him know if he could be of any service in the future, know the contents of John Wolfe's letter. got to the end of it."

I confess that I never entertained a very favorable opinion of John Wolfe, he had always seem ed to me overbearing and proud, and looked, I thought, as many young men do, who have never known anything of making a living for themselves, are very upt to think they are made out of rather superior stuff to the rest of us, and must be looked up to and smiled upon by the rest of

But I tell you I got a sight into the human heart when I read the letter. It was without exception, the kindest, most feeling, most consoling letter I ever read-so full of deep feeling for her sudden loss, so overflowing with expressions of esteem and regard for her husband, and winding up with sentiments of so divine and heavenly a trust in an overruling Providence, and the sweet consolation of religion, that I declare I could scarcely think the latter could have emanated from a man so wholly engrossed in himself- as he always seemed to be. The letter, more over contained his individual check for one thousand dollars, to meet, he said, the expenses incidental to so sudden and unexpected a bereveament. "Well, John Wolfe," said, I, after this I will never again judge a man from his appearance !" "I should like to know," said my cynical friend, interrupting me, what has this got to do with John Wolfe's rich wife." "Certainly," said I, "we shall probably come to all that in due course of time. Here take an another eigar and don't be impatient." Within a week or two after her arrival at her old home, John Wolfe received a letter from her father, returning him the one thousand dollars so kindly advanced to his daughter, with a profusion of thanks for his kindness to his bereaved child, and expressing a strong desire to be able to repay it by any service that it might be in his power to perform in return.

But there was another enclosure, which John, t seems, thought a great deal more of than the the old man's andthousand dollars, and this was a letter from the young widow herself so brimful of gratitude that he began to be almost ashamed to think that he had done so little for so rich a return, and was rather sorry he had not found and joying together, lifting her some times over time to have gone personally to comfort her in her sore affliction.

I do not know exactly how it came about but one letter brought on another, until a pretty regular correspondence sprang up between them. It happened, also, that the widew's father, who was a retired, lawyer, living on frugal savings of a frugal life, was able to confer a very considerable favor on John Wolfe's house, by saving them from a severe loss by a dishonest enstomer who had suddenly taken it into his head after a life of honesty, to turn rogue, sell goods to a customer. who presented himself just at the right time, and slip off to California with the proceeds.

A friend of the old lawver was employed to draw up the bill of sale, who mentioned to him causually that so and so was selling out and going to the new land of promise; and knowing that the individual was largely indebted to Wolfe's house, he quietly slipped himself off to New York by the first stage, without mentioning to any one but his wife and daughter where he was going .-Arrived in New York he introduced himself, to John Wolfe, and then proceeded to inform him of the important business which had brought him to the city. As the rascally creditor was expected to take the next California steamer, no time was lost in getting matters fixed, and just as the gentleman was depositing himself, carpet bag and plunder, on heard the steamer for Aspinwall, he found himself, rather unexpectedly obliged to relinguish his journey and pay a visit to John Wolfe's store, where, after paying over his indebtodness, he was reldased, only to be carefully attended to by the lest of his rather urgent credi

The whole affair proved a most successful one, and highly creditable to all parties concerned, but most especially to the young widow's father.

"You see, Mr. Cynic," said I, addressing my friend; "how one courtesy begets the other!" For all this important service, the old lawyer would only accept his expenses from home and back-said the jaunt had been worth something handsome to him in the excitement and life it gave to the stagnant blood, and would not take cent in each on any account. John Wolfe managed, however, to be upsides with him for all that. The old gentleman had hardly been home week when a package arrived by express from New York, duly addressed to his wife, which upon being opened, disclosed a very handsoem just one of the sweetest kisses he ever had in his silver ten service, with an accompanying letter | life begging her acceptance of the same, as a mark of respect and distinguished consideration for im. ever, John, if you will have me." pertant and disinterested services rendered to certain firms whose names were attached, headed, of course, by the respectable house of Wolfe, Wa- senses by exclaiming-

John Wolfe was received with high gratification by the old lawyer and his wife when he presented himself at their house. If he had been the President himself they could scarely have been prouder to receive him a guest than they were to welcome John Wolfe. Their daughter, however, was absent when he arrived, but a message was sent off: to her by the old lady, and i was not long before she made her appearance.

You may guess at the surprise of our friend John when the young widow arrived, for there stood, welcoming him, with her dancing eyes and beaming smile, no other than the fairy friend of the White Mountains, Jane Pinkerten, as he called able warmth, and being cold and chilly, he called ed her, because she was with her friends, the Pinkertone; and she, the laughing puss, altho! she knew-by his name well enough who he was, but never revealed herself to him as his loving correspondent Jane Willoughby. The women naturally love a little mytery and intrigue, and so she had kept her own secret in order to havethe pleasure of surprising him when he should visit her father's house according to promise.

John Wolfe was a happy man that evening, as he sat at tea, where the handsome silver service was displayed in his honor; and the young widow as happy as he was. I guess, and father and mother were running over with gratified pride as hey did the honors of their humble home to the young New York merchant, who had shown himself such a true gentleman in all their intercourse

A delightful evening was passed by all parties, and when John Wolfe was ushered by the old lady to the state bed-room, and had lain himself between the whitest pair of sheets that were ever bleached on the Vermont snow, he was so full of pleasant fancies and joyous hopes that he could not go as leep for hours. However, toward morning he dozed off; and, as will happen at such times, his day dreams turned themselves into night dreams, and he found himself traveling upon the rugged paths of the White Mountains, with laughing Jane Pinkerton at his side, joking some rough obstacle in the path, and then again fairly carrying her across some big drifts of snow which the summer sun had not been able to penetrate near enough to melt up and so on, until worried out, they stood to gaze upon the magnificent prospect below and around them. Suddenly John thought he was on his knees before her pouring out a torrent of passionate words, declaring that life, and hopes and happiness dwelt only where and, &c., &c., when, before he could get any answer, or know whether the dear girl smiled or frowned, behold he woke up. He was dreadfully mortified at first, but presently recollecting where he was, and seeing it was broad daylight, he jumps out of bed, makes his morning ablutions, and dressed himself in great haste, determined to wait no longer for an answer than it would take him to find the object of his dream. Down stairs he goes and into the parlor, she is not there-looks into the garden but does not see her, when suddenly bethinking such a notable dame might be a good housewife, he starts for the kitchen; where, forsooth, he finds her, singing like a bird, elbow deep into the bread trough, kneading away for dear life. John's heavy tread betraved the intruder, and she looked up.

"Do you want to know how to make a Johnny cake, Mr. Wolfe ?" she exclaimed merrily. "No," said John, rather seriously, for, like a man of deep earnest feeling as he was, he felt that the boys drive together all the pigs that were to be my Johnny cake is mixed already. I only want to know whether I can get it.

The widow did not know what to make of it. "Well," said she, "I do not know any reason why you should not." "That," replied John, "is what I want to find out; and as you know, my dear friend, that two heads are better than one. I have come to consult you about it." So to make the matter plain to her he related his dream to its termination.

I am to be John Wolfe's wife."

There were jolly times, you may be sure, in the old lawyer's house that week, and when John Wolfe carried off his little wife to New York, there was the merriest wedding party in that vil-"Well," said my friend Cynic, when I paused, "now, with all your yarn, you have not said one word about her being rich. "Well, then, give my horse a peck." "What, give your horse oysters?" "Yes," retorted Franklin, "give him a peck of vsters."

"In the shell ?"

"Yes." The hostler carried out the oysters, and many of the occupants of the fireplace went with him to vitness the great curiosity of a horse eating oysters. Franklin scated himself comfortably before the fire and derived much satisfaction and enjoyment from his funny experiment. Soon the men came in and the company, with rueful faces, expressed most decided dissatisfaction at their disappointment.

So on through the whole herd, leaving not a p.g with even a stump of tail. Cork, who worked for his grandfarther, stood by in amazement-his hands in his pockets, his tors turned in his old fur cap over his ears, his lank body warped into a crescent by the cold, and his teeth jawing against the outrage with a prodigous clatter. At last he stuttered out, "Grandpa, what you cuttin' off those tails for?". Sober and solemn was Deacon Biggs as he replied, "You never will be a rich man, for you do not know what it is to be savin'. You ought to know, my child, that it takes a bushel of corn to fatten an inch of tail!"
