To her alloted task, she will bring health, vigor, energy, and epirits, and these will give her both the power and the endur-ance without which her life must be, in some respects at least, a failure." CHINESE HABITS. Our readers have often read of the peculiar customs and almost incredulous dishes of our underground neighbors-the Chinese. But the, following, writ-ten by one who mixes with them daily, in California, we give as to us related:-"In the markets, sucking-pigs and cogs are equally exposed for sale; the one heing as readily purchased as the other. The latter, however, are not freely bought after they have been fed on animal diet, except by the very poor est classes; but are nourished with milk and rice on purpose for the table. In the markets at Canton, I have observed, side by side, a pheasant and a cat; and wpon inguiry, found them to bear pre-reisely the same againset.
