A Succinct History of the German Language. NO. II. II. Της FRANKISU PERIOD, of 359 years, from Charlemagne, A. D. 768 to the Suabian Emporors, Charlemagne, A. D. 768 to the Suabian Emperors, A. D. 1137---

The first prince, who, after the introduction of the christian religion into Germany, promoted the native literature of his country, was Charlemagne-he died A. D. 814, aged 74. He was alike illustrious in the cabinet and in the field ; a patron of learned men, a restorer of learning and of wise legislation; he wanted only the virtue of humanity, to render him the most accomplished of men. Every exertion that could possibly me made, was exerted by him, to give an impluse o German literature. Re caused the Homolies of St. Gregory, and other Writings of the Church Pathers, to be translated into German ; established schools, and formed Scientific Associations at his court. One of these societies numbered some of the most distinguished men of that day -among whom were Nanno, Alcuin, Paul Warne-fried, the distinguished Philologist, Eginhart /b. 775, died 848) Secretary to the Emperor, and the uthor of The Life of Charlemagne; Annals of the Acts of King Pepin, Charles the Great, and Lewis, from 741 to $29, and other Ecclesiastical and Historial Works. Charlemagne himself was at the head of the Society, and collected manuscripts of rare and valuable works, the National Legends and Heroic Songs of the early Germans. Of his Collections, only a fragment is preserved, the Hildebrandslied, or Song of Hildebrand. He was also engaged in writing a Gorman grammar the first over attempted & Eginhardi Vila Caroli,

December

p. 47.

To this period properly belong the Malberg Glosses to the Salio Law; and, the Leid von Heltibracht and Hadubrand.

Charlemagne's son Louis, the Pions, surnamed Debonnaire, who flourished, 814-840; and his nephew, Louis the German, were great patrons of those who cultivated German literature. By the example of the latter, men of genius, and literay taste, were encouraged, and who became noted for their philological research and learning .---Among the leading ones, Rhab. Maurus, who reormed the School system, compiled the first Latin and German Dictionary of the Bible, stood prominent. Oxfiled, a learned monk of the convent of Weisenburg, in Lower Alsace, a pupil of Phabanus, also contributed largely to the advancement of German literature. His metrical version of the four Gospels ; especially Das GES-PRAECH CHRISTI HIT DER SAMARITARINN, and a triamphant song, in commemoration of King Louis' victory over the Normans, in 853; and the translation of the Harmony, by some attributed to Tatian, are monuments of old High-German. He exerted himself to the utmost to make German a written language, although it was very difficult to express by letters, its THEN hard and strange sounds. Heinsius, speaking of Oxfried, says : "To him belong, the merit of having been the first to render arable a barren field, and to mark out an even path among stones and clods." Whether Oxfried improved the German Grammar, written by Charlemagne, or wrote a Grammar himself of the German language, is still undecided. John Schilter favors the latter opinion .--Hyse, 17.

In the days of the Saxon Emperors flourished Notker, a monk, who died at St. Gall, 1022, that greatly improved the German language by prefixes, surfixes, compounding words, making the language more euphonic and expressive. By comparing the Lord's prayer, in the Anglo Saxon translated by Egbert between 706 and 715. with Notker's German translation of 1022 and Otfried's S70, the difference between the German and Anglo Saxon, as well as the improvement of the German language, in a period of one hundred and lifty years, is apparant. The Saxon version made between A. D. 706-15.

translator of Aristotle; Willeram, abbot of Ebersburg, Bavaria (died 1085) who wrote many sermons, and books of comments on the songs of Solomon ; and is famously known as the aurhor of the Hymn of Hanno, an unsurpassed production auterior to the age of the Minne-Singers. Females, according to Hyse, no less than males, began to cultivate a taste for German literature. Horswitha, a nun of Brunswick, who flourished about A. D. 980, gained some celebrity as a profound German scholar. She however, wrote her history of Otto I, and several poems in Latin .--The poems were imitations of Terence, a dramatic writer among the Roman's, born at Carthage, the year of Rome 560.

Towards the close of the Frankin Period, the German language had greatly improved, as may be seen from an examination of authors of that day, still extant. These illustrate the gradual developement, and progressive formation of the more modern German from the Gothic and other dialects, which were softened down by degrees, until the language had become more suphonic and flexible. The old High Gorman, was much improved which was spoken and written from the seventh to the eleventh century. Two dialects, the Saxon and the Suabian, contended a long time for the supreme rule in Germany. As Suabian or Saxon Emperors ruled the land, so the one or the other was spoken or sung, and written-De Vere, 158. -R. D. I.

Inon CARS ON RAILROAD. -Several of the principal railroads in the East are about trying an exporiment, which may lead to a very general change in the construction of railroad cars. The cost of hauling the cars themselves is a very large proportion of the expense of railroad operation, and any mode of diminishing the weight without impairing the strength, would be of great advantage. One La Mothe, a Frenchman, patentvantage. One La Modde, it Frenchman, patent-ed some years since a system of combining thin strips of iron to make a very stiff and strong and very light car body, and a fall size sixty passon-ger cir is now nearly completed for trial, and will probably be put in use in a very fow weeks. It is elegantly finished with paper macho, etc; but the point of most interest lies in the fact, now protty well established by the application of prop-er tests, that while the weight of the body (the only novel portion) is about 9000 pounds, the strength and rigidity of the structure is con-siderably greater than that of any of the wooden ears in common use. The weight of the corres ponding portion of ordinary cart funges from 18. 000 to 19,000 pounds. ed some years since a system of combining thin
