a pretty large farm would often insinuate that Allen had not been any too honest in gathering together his riches, and such was the fact. A fellow sinner has since revealed some of the old Man's youthful short comings and over goings, and there was one "dodge" of his so original that it is worth a mention. It was this:

Wherever our dealer in tin ware chanced to put up for the night, he was pretty sure te make his way to the lost bed in the house. From this bed he would take a bag full of feathers, fetching in a bag from the cart gle out the same and got, it stowed away in his "kit" before any one was stirring. This proceeding giving him several pounds of good geese feathers every day, did not a liltle towards swelling the profits of his business, brightly, even fiorcely in its sunken and we are assured that it was only Evening came, and the doors were socket, and his erect form seemed to one of many similar practises in which he indulged.

On one occasion Allen slept in a bed which was very scanty-a diminutive bed, a bed of few feathers, but, all it contained were "live geese," and unusually good at that. The speculative tin ware merchant thought it would be rather small business to take away feathers from a case containing so few-in short, that his only sensible mode of procedure was to take the entire bed. He accordingly rose before the sun, and commenced shoying it out of the rear window, with the intention to go down on account of "that ere cotic," and stow it away before any one was "up." But, as ill luck would have it, the host had arisen, and was out under the window gathering some light chips and fuel for the morning fire, and when he saw the bed "looming up" in such an unnatural position, and just ready to fall to the ground, he cried out to the pedler:

"Halloa there stranger! what are you doing ?" -

The astonished "operator" saw that days before I had seen him on the Bloody Island, in the river opposite he was caught in the act, but his ready

Yet now, when that old man will soon find out what I am about -havn't slept a wink all night!"

With this, he "let" the bed out of and presence of mind seemed utterly the window, and went down to the wood-pile, from whence he took a club and gave the bed such a beating therewith as would have been fatal to any "I have sought you long, Auguste sort of "creeping thing" esconsced st.
