I noticed that the water was very high, and had not left more than 100 feet clear round my hut, which was, however, still ten or twelve feet above the level of the flood. I placed my gun outside, against the hut, and crawled into the door of the kraal. You must know that the only light which enters these buildings is by the doorway, so when I blocked up this, the only aperture, the interior was rather dark. I knew that my flint and steel box were stuck up in the thatch of the roof, and these I could use to obtain a light, in case the cubers lishment. not taken away the assagai with him. I scarcely dared to take my eyes off the snake lest the brute should dart at me; but giving a glafice round the upper part of the hut, I saw the handle of the assagai protruding from the thatch, and nearly within my reach of me. I knew that the instant I moved the snake would spring at me. I however, raised my hand and arm very slowly towards the assagai, and at length, by bending over a little, managed to grasp the handle. As I did so the snake, which had gradually uncoiled during my movements, darted towards me, I jumped aside and pulled out the broad-bladed assagai, which had been sharpened very keen, but the snake like lightning, and although he had missed his first dart, recovered himself intantly and sprung at me again. Before I could make a cut at him, his teeth caught in my leather trowsers, and he thus obtained a strong hold and with a pull as sudden as his lunge, he dragged my feet from under me, and brought me to the ground; a big fold of his body rolled over his head, and fell upon my legs, while it weighed me to the ground as if a loaded wagon were on them. He managed all this in a very short time; but I was not idle, for I knew that if he could once manage to press down my chest, or my arms, he

Now, the feeling that first came upon me was certainly not a pleasant one, because I was without a weapon; but as soon as I grasped the as sagai, I knew I was safe; consequently when he really attacked me, I felt as though it was a piece of impudence on his part, for I never expected the affair would have been as dangerous to me as it proved to be. These things take some time to tell, but they do not take long to happen, and a struggle for life and death is frequently decided in half a minute. So with me. The instant the snake's body came over my legs, I twisted around, and sliced it with the assagai. I gave two terrible gashes, and the monster, releasing his hold of my leathers, sprang at my face. I raised my arm instinct vely to protect myself, which saved me from being bitten; but I was knocked down flat, and the brute was again on me; but this time I caught it by the neck with my left hand, and in an instant had nearly severed his head with the assagai. I scrambled away from the monster, which was writhing about in its agony, and escaped from the hut. To my surprise, I found that a deep scratch near the ankle and a bite near the wrist, neither of which was of great importance, were all the wounds which I had sustained. For some days afterwhich I had sustained. For some days afterwards, however, I suffered a great deal of pain in the legs, where the snake had pressed me.

I do not think that I should have escaped to tell the tale, if I had not found the assagui, as the boa, although unwilling to attack you when he is in the open country, is pugnacious enough when shutup with you in a circular hut about eight feet in diameter. We soon hauled the snake from the hut, when my Hottentot arrived and

FORCE OF GUNPOWDER.

The removal of the ruins of old St. Paul's in London, formed an instructive chapter in architectives. We learn from the "Life of Wren," that the walls, eighty feet perpendicular and five feet thick, and the tower at least two bundred feet high, though cracked and swayed and tottering, stuck obstinately together, and their removal, stone by stone, was found tedious and dangerous. At first, men with picks and levers loosened the stones above, then canted them over, and laborers moved them away below, and piled them into heaps. The want of room (for between the walls of the church and those of the houses, there lay a street only some thirty yards wide,) made this way slow and unsafe. Several men lost their lives and the piles of stone grow steep and largs. Thus, however, Sir Christopher Wren proceeded, gaining every day more room, till he came to the middle tower that bore the steeple. The remains of the tower being nearly two hundred feet high, the laborers were afraid to work above; thereupon he concluded to facilitate this work by the use of gunpowder. He dug a hole down by the north-west pillar of the tower, the four pillars of which were each about fourteen feet diameter .-When he had dug to the foundation, he then, with crows and tools made on purpose, wrought hole two feet square, hard into the centre of the pillar. There he placed a little tin box, containing eighteen pounds of powder, and no more. A cane was fixed to the box with a quick match, as gunners call it, within the case, which reached from the box to the ground above; and along the ground was laid the train of powder with a

After the mine was carefully closed up again with stone and mortar to the top of the ground, he then observed the effect of the blaw. The little quantity of powder not only lifted up the whole angle of the tower, with two great arches which rested upon it, but also two adjoining arches of the aisles and all above them. And this it seemed to do somewhat leisure'y, cracking the walls to the top, lifting visibly the whole weight above nine inches, which suddenly jumping down made a great beap of rains in the place without scattering. It was half a minute before the beap opened in two or three places, and emitted some smoke. By this description may be observed the incredible force of powder, eighteen pounds of which lifted up three thousand tons, and saved the work of a thousand laborers. The fall of so great a weight from a height of two hundred feet, gave concussion to the ground that the inhabitants around took for an earthquake. During Wren's absence, his superintendent larger hele, put in a greater charge of gunpowder, and, neglecting to fortify the mouth of the mine, applied the match. The explosion accomplished the object; but one stone was displaced with such violence that it flew to the opposite side of the church-yard, smashed in a window where some women were sitting, and alarmed the whole neighborhood so much that they united in petitioning that no more powder should be used.
