When wearied, burden'd here with care and sin, The soul's reflector speaks that soul within, High thoughts of love and glory swell and rise, And speechless feeling trembles in the eyes; And tears may come, the feelings' sweet relief Are tears of jey, as well as tears of grisf; Byes may reflect a heaven we cannot tell, Or mirrror in their depths the pangs of hell! Eyes are the windows in our house of clay Through which we see the light of nature's day; With our immertal eye, the quenchless soal, We pieces beyond to haven's eternal goal, Where purified from angle of sin and ill, Undying glories shall our spirits thrill : No more shall earthly sorrow dim our eyes, Where they shall sparkle fadeless in the skies.
