"he was familiarly called, in conse-quence of a woful deficiency in stature—was a native of Pennsylvania, bred and born in one of the interior counties, but whether Berks, Union or Centre, I am not prepared to say. All I know of his history I learned incidentally from other parties, the gist of which is, that at an early day he went into business in which business consisted in retailing everything suitable to the wants of a community, from a needle to a cross. cut saw, from a stick of liquorice to a hogshead of sugar. In a business of this kind men will rise to competency if they are shrewd, calculating, keep an eye open for the chances, and care of number one. But that was not Johnny's style. He was one of your free, open hearted fellows, who had not the moral courage to say No, even when a friend proposed to "take a drink," and "take a drink" became to him as familiar as house words .---It is true that Johnny's pliable nature induced him to take a good many drinks, but still, his business went Mr. Sharpe, one of the town lawyers. called Johnny into a side room. lawyer, "I have my remedy, and shall push the claim, forthwith."

Sharpe went out, and would proba-bly have wended his way direct to a despatch for him, which required his presence in Philadelphia forthwith, and, without telling any person where he was going, he took the next train, and reached Philadelphia-at night. After he had left the store, Bivins sat soberly reflecting for an hour, and the more he reflected over it, the more fully satisfied he became that, in putting his name to the paper, he had been most villainously entrapped by Sharpe. He went across the way, to an old attorney, to whom he told all the facts in the case, and asked for advice. The old attorney, allowed it was a peculiar case, but palpably plain that it was a downright swindle the hotel. on the part of Sharpe, who had evi-
