Choice Poetry.

REMINISCENCE.

I met thee last night in thy splendor,
With the old smile I once loved to see;
And I thought of the passion so tender
Which in youth I had cherished for me.
With a strange, wild emotion I started,
As that once beloved form glided by,
For the ghost of an old love departed
Was revealed in the glance of thins eye!

Once we deemed that no absence could wean us.
That our hearts were as fixed as the poles;
But a dark gulf of years rolled between us,
And left its cold chill on our souls.
Ab I those sweet summer days at old "Landwood
They shall smile on us twain never more;
I would give all the fame of my manhood
For one thrill of that passion of yore!

Though long years had passed ere I mest thee,
(Ah, years that seem ages of wo!)
I know thou couldst never forget me,
And the flush on thy cheek told me so.
I knew though thy marriage might yield thee
A rich, yellow harvest of gold,
All the wealth of the world could not shield thee
From the shadow I cast on thy soul!

We can harbor no hate for each other. we can haroor no nate for each other.

For the old love still hallows the past,
And I've sworn I would be as thy brother
While life's weary journey should last.
Though cold as the Florentine Formst.
And as lovely thou seem'st to me now.
Let the world, that come basely to me now,
Detect not a cloud on my brow!

Can ye bring back the bloom of the roses
When the soft glow of summer has fied?
Or awake the loved form that reposes
In the calm, solemn sleep of the dead?
Ah, though we may love in a "fashion"—
In friendship, in honor and truth—
Life has but one wild, thrilling passion,
Which lightens and dies out in youth!
