Choice Poetry.
THE MAIDEN'S PRAYER.
She rose from her delicious sleep,
And put away her soft brown hair,
And in a low and sweet voice sang,
As her first wish she uttered,
Her soul-white hands together pressed,
Her eyes were closed in prayer,
The folded linen on her breast,
Just swelling with the charms it hid,
And from her long and flowing tress,
Escaped a bare and soft foot,
Which she stepped on the earth did press,
Like a new snowflake, soft and mute;
And then from slumber, soft and warm,
Like a young spirit fresh from heaven,
She bowed that light and maturing form,
And humbly prayed to be forgiven.
Oh, God! if souls unloosed as these
Need daily mercy from Thy throne;
If she who has her bodied truce,
Our holiest and purest one,
She with a face so tender bright,
We deem her some stray child of light;
If she, with things so soft in tone,
Is now to fall from earth to earth,
Must not we pray for grace from thee,
That for her dearest things have been,
How hardy, if she will not heaven,
Will our wild errors be forgiven!

Miscellaneous.
SPEECH WITHOUT WORDS, OR,
CIRCUMVENTING A BURGLAR.
"I don't see, Aunt Georgy," observed a small boy of five and a half years, in an English village, who was sticking at his figures during an arithmetical examination—"I don't see the good of the multiplication table. It seems to me to be going through so much to get at so little."
"You'd rather play at 'tit tat toe,' I dare say, Dickey," remarked his beloved aunt, smiling sarcastically.
"Ay, there's something in that," replied the youth, unconscious of her sarcasm; "one sees what one is driving at here, all along."
"Nevertheless, everything has its use," persisted the old lady, who was a very Minerva for aphorisms, and like that heathen celebrity, kept a bird, which, however, was not an owl, but a parrot. "No one can tell what immense advantages may flow from the acquisition."
"From the what?" interrupted the rude lad, who was of an inquiring rather than a reverent disposition.
"From learning the least things, my dear."
"Ah," observed the boy, "I dare say; there's the alphabet now, for instance, ain't there? Who ever first hit on that, I wonder, to teach a fellow to read?"
"Ay, and there's the deaf and dumb alphabet, too, Dickey, which teaches people to talk without words."
"And were you ever deaf and dumb, Aunt Georgy? O my, what a funny boy!"
"If you don't use these very strange words, child—and where you pick them up, I am sure, quite a marvel to me—I'll tell you a story of how Aunt Georgy herself once saved her life, entirely through having learned the deaf and dumb alphabet; shall I?"
"Instead of the lesson, Aunt Georgy? O yes, I should like it better than pie."
"There were two little boys, Dickey, and one of them not very much older than you, who used to come and stay with your Uncle Frank—you never saw him, dear child, did you? Ah, he would have liked those bonny blue eyes! to stay with Uncle Frank and me, when we were first married; and they could not hear or speak, Dickey."
"Couldn't they eat neither, Aunt Georgy, nor drink, nor nothing?"
"O yes; they were only deaf and dumb; but that is a very dreadful misfortune indeed, my child, of itself. They could not talk except with their fingers—so—only over so much quicker."
"That ain't talking; that's a cat's cradle, Aunt Georgy!"
"No, it isn't; it's speech, though there are no words. I said then—"Dickey, don't interrupt your Aunt with foolish observations."
"I didn't hear you then," replied Dickey.
"Perhaps not, my dear, but nevertheless I did say it; so don't. Your Uncle Frank and I learned this foreign alphabet on purpose that we might understand what these two poor lads had to say. They were far quicker, far cleverer than you, Dickey; they could read and write, ay, and draw and sew, and do many other things which you would make but a very bad hand at."
"Could they play at 'tit tat toe,' Aunt Georgy?"
"Yes; and at draughts, and backgammon, and chess, and at fox and gesso, as well as any boys. They could almost see what he said, though they could not hear, with such quick eager eyes did they watch every movement of our lips. We soon, however, got to talk as easily with our fingers as with our tongues; and sometimes, when the lads were not with us, Uncle Frank and I used to converse in that manner when we were alone, for practice."
"It happened that on one occasion that he had to go up to London on important business; he was to have gone by an afternoon train, but something delayed him, so that he was not able to leave before the night express. I was not in very good health, and retired to my bedroom about two hours before his departure; he promised, however, to come up and wish me good-bye before he started, which he did before twelve and one o'clock in the morning. The matter which called him away was connected with the bank here, and which had just been burnt down; and my husband it the thick curtain behind—If you do but whisper it, woman, I will kill you where you lie. Will you swear not to tell him?"

"I will," said I solemnly; "I promise not to open my lips about the matter."
"Your Uncle Frank leaned over the pillow to kiss me, and observed how terrified I looked."
"You have been frightening yourself about robbers again, I suppose, you silly child!"
"Not I, Frank," returned I, as cheerfully as I could; "I have only a little headache;" but I said with my fingers, so that he could plainly read it in the freckles—"For God's sake hush! there is a man behind the bed-head!"
"Your Uncle Frank was as bold as a lion, and had nerves like iron, although he was so tender hearted and kind. He only answered, 'Where is your salvatella, dearest?' and went to the mantel-piece to get it. I thought he could not have understood me, he spoke with such coolness and unconcern, until I saw his fingers rest as he took up the bottle; 'All right; don't be afraid!' And then I was not afraid, Dick, or at least not so much; for I knew that I should not be left one instant in that room alone; and I felt that my Frank was a match for any two men in such a cause. Only he has no weapon—'He has a life preserver,' (pistol) said I with my finger."

"Your fire is getting rather low, Georgy," observed he as he took up the poker. Ah, he had a weapon then! I must leave you a good fire to comfort you before I go." He poked the fire, and left the poker in, but without ever taking his eye off me and the bedhead. I will just ring the bell, and see whether Thomas has got the portmanteau ready." "Mary," continued he to the maid that answered the bell, "send Thomas up." Then, when she had gone up that errand: "By Jove! I never gave him that key; where is it, Georgy? I have not a minute to lose; if it is in your dressing case with the rest there, I shall be an age in looking for it. Might I ask you to get out of bed for an instant, and show me which it is?" He said with his fingers, jump! and I jumped enough, and was inside the dressing room, and with the door locked, in half a second.
"Come in, Thomas," said your uncle; "come in;" for Thomas was modestly hesitating at the chamber door; there is some blackguard got into the house and behind my bed there; if he makes the least resistance, I'll kill him with this hot poker."
"At these words the bed was pushed slowly onwards, and the burglar, without his craped mask, and with a face as pale as ashes, emerged from his hiding place. Your Uncle Frank knew him at once as having been a bank messenger, who had been turned out of his situation since the fire, upon suspicion of dishonesty."
"O, sir, have pity on me," cried he; "I'm an unlucky dog. If it had not been for a sneeze, I should have had ten thousand pounds in my pocket by this time!"
"Oh, you came after that did you? I saw your husband coolly. Well, please to give up that life preserver which you have in your pocket before we can have any more conversation."
"And did your lady tell you that too?" cried the villain, in accents of astonishment as he delivered up the weapon to the man servant; "and yet I stood by her yonder, and never heard her utter a syllable."
"I never spoke a word," cried I through the dressing room keyhole, for I did not wish the man to think that I had broken my oath; nor, to say the truth, was I anxious to make a deadly enemy of him, in case he should be ever at large again.
"Then it's a judgment on me, you exclaimed the wretch; and it's no good for me to fight against it."
"It's not the least good," replied your Uncle Frank decisively, "and we will go to the police office at once."
"So off the burglar went in their custody, leaving poor Aunt Georgy safe and sound after all. And now, don't you think there may be some use in learning everything, even so small a thing as the deaf and dumb alphabet, Dickey?"
"Sometimes," replied the small boy, cautiously, "not wishing to commit himself to the general question."
"It actually saved my life, you see," continued the old lady; "and I didn't break my promise either, did I Dickey? I said I wouldn't speak a word, and I didn't; for what I said was what I called speech without words."
"Oh," replied the small boy, cunningly, "that is what you call it, is it? Now, should you to know what I call it?"
"Yes, you funny child, I should," replied his aunt admiringly.
"Well, Aunt Georgy," said the youthful moralist, as he slipped off Minerva's lap with a wicked laugh, "I should call it acting a fib without telling one; and a precious big fib too!"
"My husband, sir," returned I; "but, pray, don't hurt him, pray!"
"Is he not to be towed then?" cried the Ruffian, with an oath of disappointment.
"He is going at twelve o'clock," replied I; "he is indeed!"
"If you tell," said the burglar hoarsely; "if you breathe but one word of my presence here, or one word of the death of you both, I'll have the death-doom of you both; he had slipped into the place, in an instant. My husband entered immediately afterwards, and even while he was in the room, I heard the awful threat repeated once again through
