BUSHING TOMATOES.—Those who lieve good tomatoes, will take pains to cultivate them so as to insure them as near as may be in their full perfection. There is no other fruit that delights more in the air and sunshine than the tomator. They should have, therefore, abundance of room, and the rings be sustained from falling to the earth. Stout break firmly ret around the themselves as they like, while the limbs of the brush keep them in their position. By this method the fruit is more exposed to the genial influence of the air and sunshine. Where it attains a more delicious flavor, larger size, and comes buildlefer to maturity.
