loosened from its opposite fastening on the fence, and the whole of it left hanging in loops from the nail, and falling within about three feet of the ground. While the mother was preparing supper above, the child was supposed to be playing below, and while the family were at supper, a neighbor had occasion to enter the kitchen, when she saw the child suspended by the neck outside the kitchen door, doad. The alarm was given, and the mother rushing down found her child a corpse! Her anguish at the sight may be imagined.

"It is supposed that the little boy was standing on the wall playing with the rope, and as one of these loops passed around the neck, it stumbled and fell, strangling itself as in a case of intentional hanging. The child's feet when found were touching the ground, and it was entirely dead .-Coroner Snyder held an inquest, and rendered a verdict of socidental strangulation."

MULES vs. HORSES.

The prominent reasons for using mules in teaming and farm labor, in preference to horses, are briefly exnibited in the following views: They live to a much greater age; a mule has scarcely attained his matured strength at twelve years old, an age in which horses have commenced a rapid deterioration in value and usefulness .-The average life of the mule is about thirty years, but often at forty they are known to perform efficiently the most laborious services. A team of mules will accomplish almost the labor of horses with a consumption of that a druggist of that city, who held about one-third less provender.
