THE DISTANT SHORE.

Our barks are drifting onward,

All noiselessly they glide
Upon Time's restless ocean,
Out on the rushing tide.
The blue waves dash around us,
And loud the billows rear,
But railsows wreathe with heanty
The far off distant shore.

There friends are waiting for us,
The loved, the tried, the true;
But Time's fiell might curtain
Now hides them from our view.
They've reached the quiet harbor,
Not lost, but gone before;
And now they wait to great us,
Upon the distant shore.

We've watched their peaceful life barks Glide from our sight away, And dark the shadows lengthened Around our hearts to play. A gentle sister left us, A mother smiles no more; But, oh! we hope to meet them Upon the distant shore.

Life has its days of sadn cas,
Its bright hopes and its fears;
Life has its saniles and sunshine,
Its cares, its griefs, and tears.
But in that bitter country,
All sorrow will be o'er;
Each day our barks are drifting
Nearer the distant shore.

Ot thou, whose skies are clouded, Whose sails are tempost-riven, A brighter day awaits thee—"There's rest for thee in heaven." Look up! the sun is shining. I Though fast the rain-drops pour, And list! there's music floating. Out from the distant shore.

And ye, whose hearts are thrilling
With hope, and joy, and love,
Who sait on life's broad ocean,
With clear bright skies above,
O turn, to cheer the weary,
Swift ply the silver oar,
And picht life's weary voyager
To the bright die tant shore.
