Having seen that his arms were ready for use, he rode slowly forward, keeping a careful watch on each side of the road, that he might not be surprised. As long as the woods kept open as they were he had no fear, as there was no good hiding place for a man. Ere long, the woods began to get thicker and sombre. Little hillocks, covered with bushes, became more frequent, until at last they became a long range, skirting at each side of the road. The horseman felt that the time which was to try him was near at hand, and he dropped the reins until his hand covered a holster pistol, which he firmly grasped in such a manner as a person would not no tice, and he then assumed an air of carelessness, though his watch was keener than ever. At length he came have to toil hard for my daily bread, to a place which he felt certain contained his enemy. Nature seemed to have adapted this place for the purpose of concealment. The rocks which skirted the road at this place, were about breast high, and as perpendicular as to be nearly impervious. The tall trees on each side of the road twined their tops together forming a natural roof of leaves, and rendering the place as dark and dismal as mid-that ! 'You shall have a bullet through your head, if you prefer it.' The other ducked his head in expectation of the shot, and then made a desperate spring at the detective .-The latter, however, was in no hurry to fire, and coolly awaited the other's attack. The charcoal burner grasped the reins with his left hand, and with his right endeavored to grasp the pistol. The detective however, caught his right hand, with his own left, and holding it up with an iron grasp, passed his right hand under, until his pistol pressed against the other's forchead, when he fired. The other instantly relaxed his bold, and, with a terrible cry, fell back a corpse!

The detective, having accomplished the purpose of his visit, did not delay his return to Paris, but having explained the affair to the authorities at '--, he departed.

And thus was the earth rid of two as great monsters in human form as and of the fifteen or twenty savages ever lived.

brother to leave him and fly for his life. But this generous man had no such intention.

With all the haste possible, Bates, after getting the team and sleigh to the door, managed to drag the bed on which his brother lay upon the vehi-cle, and throwing in clothing and such ther necessaries as came nearest to hand, started off in the rear of the fly. ng fugitives. But so rough was the ground that the wounded youth could endure no other than the slowest mo-

Bates, therefore, found it necessary for him to restrain his team to the slowest walk, while he could see in nis rear the flames bursting out of the doors and windows of the house they had just quitted, and the yells and war-whoops of the drunken Indiana rang with startling effect in his ears.

House after house was fired, and before the young man had reached the top of the hill on their way out of the place, the entire village was wrapped in flames. They could see the painted warriors, wild with drink and bedecked. with the plunder of the stores, dancing and howling in the streets, like so many incarnate demons; and mingled here and there among them, and dodging in and out of the burning buildings, their British associates as busily engaged in the work of plunder as the savages, while obscene oaths. and drunken songs attested their infernal joy. On the other hand, as they moved lowly along, they could see teams. and groups of their neighbors and friends disappearing rapidly in the distance, while they were forced to move along slowly and exposed to the first party of drunken and infuriated savages who might espy them. Moving thus along, they had proceeded something like half a mile from the smoking village, when on ascending an eminence, Bates was startled by a fierce war whoop in the rear, and to his horror discovered a band of savages in pursuit of them, and wildly gesticulating for them to stop. In the excitement of the moment ne urged his team to a faster gait; but a cry of pain from Lothorp caus. ed him to slacken his speed again; and catching up a gun he had the forethought to throw into the sleigh, he prepared to defend his helpless rother to the last. Lothorp now perceiving the danger they were in, and knowing, in his feeble condition, that escape was hopeless unless swifter progress could be made, begged his brother to drive on. At least it could only be death to him; and if the motion of the sleigh over the rough ground should kill him, he thought it would certainly be better tive! At last Bates snatched up the gun from the sleigh and ran off to one side of the road, to draw the Indians, if possible, away from Lothorp. The ruse partially succeeded; but as a fierce looking Indian pursued Bates more closely than was consistent with his safety, he turned suddenly, and leveling his gun at the savage, fired. The Indian gave a terrific yell, leaped into the air. ran a few paces, and fell dead .-The death of their leader exasperated the savages to the last degree, and they were about to wreak their vengeance on the brothers, when upon their right on the mountain, they heard a wild, ringing war whoop, and the next minute a volley of rifle shots whistled toward them, and several of the pursuers fell killed and wounded
