AN ENGLISH DETECTIVE'S STORY

A SEARCH FOR A CRIMINAL IN AMERICA.

Being off of duty for the time, and the evening close and sultry, I was just settling myself in the open wanted by the superintendent. I went at once as required.

"Banks," said the superintendent last towards finding that man Jennings."

"Indeed, sir, I am glad to hear you say so," answered I, and I spoke the and gougings, and shootings, were ontruth. Uncommonly glad I was, for our profession, like the rest, has its pride about it, and we had been a good deal twitted in the newspapers for not having succeeded, during seven months of fruitless search in securing that particular criminal. A shy fellow was that Jennings. His doubles and twists had baffled some of He knew, Jennings did, how much the deapest heads in the police, and tougher would be the work of any ofalthough we had often come upon his ficer to ferret him out, and bring him other rogues. hiding place just after he had left it, miles of rail and river, and unhealthy we never could lay hands on him.-He was not a common offender. Well educated, and born in a very respectable station in life, he might have done well, and made an honest fortune, if he could but have kept straight. He was clever and a first-rate accountant, and got the post of eashier to the

- Bank, while still quite a young man. I need hardly repeat his story -how ne forged, and figures in pass books, and played ducks and drakes with the floating balance of his employers. It is a common narrative. He went off at last, just when detection grew certain, and carried with him nineteen thousand pounds, besides valuable papers and securities for a large amount. Every exertion was made, no expense was spared, and many times we seemed sure of him as he prowled up and down the country in various disguises; but at last the scent grew colder and colder, and we feared Jennings had given us the slip for good and all. Five months had elapsed since the last time be had been seen or heard of, and we had given up the job as hopeless, when the superintendent sent for me, and gave me the above information.

"Yes," said my superior, rubbing his hands together, as was his way when he was thoughtful, "we have got a clue to him at last. But he is a long way off-out of our reach, perhaps. He is in America." This did not surprise me in the least. The number of rogues that I "We believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermator rhea, as near a Specific as any medicine can be."—B. Kerri, M. D. [Am. Jour. of Medical Science.
