The house in which he was born is now within our lines, and is used as a hospital. A FASHIONABLE WEDDING IN INDIA. - A correspondent of the Lahore Chronicle gives an account of the marriage of the son of the Maharajah of Cashmere with the daughter of the Rajah of Chumba .-The Cashmere chief came to to the wedding with whole court and 10,000 followers. The marriage presents were numerous and costly. According to the Rajpoot custom, each chief on becoming a guest received a present of a bag of money, and on being dismissed by the Maharajah a handsome khillut, with another bag of money. During the hours of the night the nuptial knot was tied, a form which is literally performed according to Hindoo custom, by tying the garments of the bride and bridegroom together, while the incantations are read. The bridegroom is a hoy of nine, the bride an infant. The marriage ceremonies are said to have cost the Rajah 70,000 rupees, and the Maharajah about 15 lakhs.

Halleck for the purpose of being exchanged for Tennessee prisoners.

BENT OFF. - A portly young friend of ours the other day contemplated for some minutes the ponderous dimensions of a bystander's feet, and then in a tone of utter wonder, said, as he surveyed the man's upper works: "You'd have been a devlish tall man if they hadn't bent you off so far up."

It is said that by digging around the roots of the trees, quantities of worms may be found penetrating the bark and seriously damaging the trees. These worms may be destroyed with lye, and the leaves will, after the destruction of the worm is accomplished, straighten, and the young fruit will remain.

permanent cure in the most aggravated cases, whether
