THE CORNER.

JOHN BROUGHTON:

That regulated system of combat with the closed fists, which bears the benit to be peculiar to England, dates only from the earlier half of the eigh teenth century. The rules, including these notable ones regarding rounds, and the interval of half a minute between each, which give such a marked character to the practice-a sort of humanity relieving its barbarismwere the production of John Broughton, who kept a booth for the exhibition of boxing in the Tottenham Court Road ; they are dated the 10th of August, 1743. It seems to have been on the decline of sword combat MERCHANT TAILORING. exhibitions in the reign of George I., that the comparatively harmless amusement of boxing arose. There appears to be no such thing known at an earlier date.

Broughton was the first who stood in the position of Champion-a distinction which he held for eighteen years. It gives a ourious idea of the tastes of the English of his day, that his most notable patron was the king's second son, the Duke of Cumberland, so noted for his butcheries after the battle of Culloden. The Duke probably attended Broughton's boxing booth within a week of his going forth upon that famous expedition, in which the fate of a dynasty was decided ; probably, it was one of the first places of amusement he went to after his triumphant return. He, once took Broughton with him on a journey to the continent, and on showing him the grenadier guards at Berlin, asked the pugilist what he thought of any of those fellows for a 'set to ;' to which Broughton is said to have answered, that he would have no objection to take up the whole regiment, if he were only allowed a breakfast between each two battles.

Broughton was admitted to have a constant originality, as well as great power, in his style of boxing, and he seems to have been a man of -sense and ability, apart from his profession. He was at the very acme of his reputation, when he was so unfortunate as to fall into a quarrel with a butcher named Slack, who consequently challenged him. The champion himself, and the whole circle of his friends and admirers, regarded the challenger with contempt, and when the combat commenced, the betting was ten to one in Broughton's favor. But Slack contrived, at an early period of the contest, to hit Broughton between the eyes and blinded him .--The poor man had undiminished strength, but he was not able to see his antagonist. His royal patron. with characteristic brutality, called out to him : "Why, Broughton, you can't fight-you are beat !"

"Proud Cumberland prances, insulting the slain." It was too true. The fight closed in fourteen minutes, with the defeat of the hitherto unmatched hero. "The faces in the amphitheatre," says the historion of the day, "were of all maniner of colors and lengths." The Duke was understood to have lost thou-
