The number of species of reptiles is set down at two thousand, or less than that of mammels or birds. Most IN MEDICINES QUALITY IS OF of them are terrestrial, but some, it is said can sustain themselves in the air. Some reptiles live habitually in the water, swimming by means of Cattened fins, as the turtles, or by a thin tail, as in crocodiles; others *dwell in subterranean burrows.

. Every degree of speed is found among reptiles; and, while some are fitted to run over dry sand, others are better adapted to climbing trees or ascending smooth surfaces. The means of defence with which nature means of defence with which nature has provided reptiles are many; and, although their appearance is sufficient to repel most animals, yet they are farnished with other safeguards, which render an attack upon them, to say the least, unpleasant. The crocodile and turtle are sufficiently protected against ordinary assaults; the ability of the lizard serves him well, for he darts into his hole at the expense, possibly, of his tail, which is soon reproduced.
