great admirer of music, was visiting the South, and was petted in society. A fashionable lady friend of his had two pretty daughters, who had just finished their education at "a boarding school" in Philadelphia Our friend, the doctor, was invited to dine and hear the girls play upon the plano. He was asked for his favorite tune, and he requested the fair performer to play Duke of York's March -It was performed, but with such grand flourishes and variations that he saw or heard but little if any of Duke of York's March in it. He was again asked for his preference. Thinking that he wasmisunderstood in the first instance, he again said in a little louder voice, "Duke of York's March, madam!" It was again performed as at first, but he still could not make out his favorite, the Duke of York's time, he spoke very loud: Duke-of-York's March?

"Why, doctor," replied the lady, "the Duke of York's March has been played twice for you."

"Well, well," said the doctor, with great coolness, "the young ladies have played it so well I should be delighted to hear it a third time !"
