The Premier and the Station-Master. At one of the chief abutious on the Great Western railway (say the Western Morning News) is a station-master noted for self-conceit and flunkeyism. His reverence for a person with a handle to his name is equalled only by the esteem in which he holds himself. One day he descried a gentlemen pacing the platform with a cigar in his mouth. Mr. atonce accosted the audacious offender and requested him forthwith to stop smokdag. The gentleman took no notice of this command, but continued his walk, emitting a silvery cloud. Irritated by this disobedience, Mr. repeated his behests more perempto-

of the Havana maintained a provoking disregard. A third time the order was repeated, accompanied with the threat that if the obstinate sinner did not obey be would be handed over to the tender mercies of the portore. He took no more notice than before; and so at last, enraged, Mr. pulled the cigar out of the smoker's mouth and flung it away. This than commands and threats, and the peripatetle philosopher continued his walk quite serenely. Presently a carriage and four drove up-an equipage well known to Mr.—as that of the Duke of Beaufort. To his inconceivable horror the refractory smoker entered the said charriot, and drove off in style to Badminton.
Mr. asked in tremulous tones who the stranger was, and he felt ready to sink into the earth when he licard that it was Viscount Palmerston, K.G. First Lord of the Treasury. He dide not hesitate long, however; he at once ordered a chaise and pair and drove off to Badminton. Arrived there, be sent in his card, and urgently requested a private interview with Lord Palmerston. His lordship soon appeared, when Mr. began a most abject apology for having "so grossly insulted his lordship. Had he known who his lordship was he would not have so treated his lordship for the world." The Premier heard the station master out, then looking down upon him sternly, and with his hands in his pockets, said : "Sir I respected you because I thought you were doing your duty like a Briton; but now I see you are nothing but a sucb." Aud thus ended the station-master's interview with the Premier.
