"But." replied Sumner." Massachusetts has always been a loyal State.' "That may be," replied the President, "but the loyal men of the South have made untold sacrifices for their Union sentiments, while Massachusetts has made hundreds of millions out of her loyalty, and it would be a poor return for Southern adherance to the government, if the latter, should, in violation to the Constitution, thrust upon them local laws in opposition to their wishes."

At this reply of the President, Mr. Sumner became impatient and irritable, and rejoined by saying, "I am sorry to see you evincing so little sympathy with that element that placed you in power."

At this; the color flashed to the President's face, and he added, emphatically, "You and I might as well understand each other now as any other time. You are aware, sir, I have no respect for a secessionist; but, as much as I despise them, I still have a greater detestation and contempt for a fanatic."

"Good evening," said Sumner, and left the room in a huff.
