TO TIME.

Oh, haste, old Time, on speedy wing,
The laggard hours
Bring quickly near the joyous spring,
The time of flowers;
Bring back the happy-singing birds
And greenest leaves,
Lade the air with melody, sweeter than words—
The heart receives
With gladness throbs such happy dower,
Blue skies, warm sunshine, and summer
shower.

Give new life to the forest trees,
Their buds to swell!
Waft zephyrs on the perfumed breeze
From yonder dell;
Break the cold, joy chains that hold
The brook-lets bound,
That they may tell us as of old,
With tinkling sound
Like silvery bells, how happy they
That winter, stern and chill, has passed away.

And bring, O Time, a robe of green,
The felix to deck,
In style befitting nature's queen,
At nature's beck,
We'll list again to the soft plash
Of dripping eaves;
We'll hear again the loud waves dash,
While fancy weaves
A chain more light to bind the soul,
Each joyless half in one melodious whole.

OUT OF THE DROSS.

BY EMMA M. JOHNSTON.

Wandering about the suburbs of the city, I found myself upon some open commons, where heaps of dust, ashes and rubbish were piled up. At one of these heaps I thought I saw some living object moving about, and drawing nearer, I found an old woman, upwards of seventy, lean, wrinkled and grizzled, digging into the dirt by means of a piece of stick; but in her eagerness often discarded the stick, and using her claw-like fingers. Her bent and battered old figure was tremulous with excitement, and she kept up a mumbled conversation with herself.

Drawing near, I spoke to her, and she started, raising herself, and shaking from her eyes some gray locks which had fallen over them.

"You are busy," I said; "what is it all about?"

"I'm a-lookin' for a jewel honey."

"A jewel!" I echoed, thinking the old woman wandering in her mind, because of the weakness of old age. "A jewel in a heap of dirt?"

"Yes, bless you, they do find 'em here sometimes. Leastways, Big Jim found a rare diamond once."

"And how long have you been searching?" I asked.

"Oh, not long; only these three months goin' on four. I come every day and hunt a spell, and then I go home and rest my old bones."

"And you really think you will find a jewel?" I said to her; pity, amusement and incredulity all blending in my voice.

"For sure I will, honey; I'm just bound to hunt till I git it."

I looked at the eager, tremulous old creature, spending her little all of strength in the vain hope of finding some precious thing. Should I make any effort to reach her higher nature? Could it be possible that she would understand an appeal to her soul?

While I hesitated I was condemned; and there came to my listening, throbbing heart, borne on the stillness of the June day, these words: "Out of the dross!"

"Hear me!" I said to the woman; "I want to tell you about a jewel that is of more value than any that has ever been found. One such as your old eyes have never seen, nor your old heart ever dreamed of."

"Yes, yes, honey, I hear you. Tell me about it."

Then I spoke that talismanic name—Jesus! And unfolded slowly and carefully the whole blessed plan of salvation, which included even such as she.

"Where is he?" she asked, dreamily. "I think I kind o' heerd o' him once before."

"He is here," I replied.

She started and looked about on every side.

Now was the time to fix the impression so that the work might be perfect. I sent up a sudden prayer for wisdom and strength, which brought an immediate answer; and then, with a delicate choice of words, so that all might be simple to that simple comprehension, I explained how Christ might be near us, even in our hearts by faith, while we could not see him in the flesh. I told her how the single, sincere cry of a sinner would bring him to the sinner's side, quick to forgive and quick to comfort.

"Honey, it's all very nice to talk this ere way when you've got good clothes and a plenty to eat. But look at me—only rags to cover me, and my old bones all twisted with rheumatiz."

"Were you always so poor?"

"No; time was when I was a likely enough woman; but I got into bad company, and then I kind o' sloughed off. But if I could find a jewel in this ere heap, why I'd git all right agin."

"Tell me, was Big Jim all right after he found his diamond?"

She looked at me suspiciously for a moment. "Now how did you know that Jim didn't do well? He didn't do well, that's a fact. He sold that diamond and got lots o' money, but he drunk hard and quarreled, and at last he was worse off than ever; hadn't a cent, and died in my cellar."

"Many times after that I saw old Liz, sometimes hunting the ash heaps, sometimes in her wretched culler."

Then I left the city for a time and on my return I received a message; Liz was dying—she wanted to see me.

I hurried off, hoping I was not too late.

When I entered the cellar the first words which greeted me were these: "I've give it up. I shan't hunt for it no more. I don't keer much, anyhow. It wouldn't have done me much good. Big Jim's didn't do him no good."

"Liz," I said, gently. "There was another search I told you of. Have you thought about that? Have you been looking for Jesus?"

To my surprise she nodded her head. "O, tell me, Liz," I cried, "have you found the Saviour?"

"It's mighty strange to me," she answered, speaking feebly but distinctly, "but last night, a-layin' here, I was kind o' groppin' in the dark, like, to see if I could see him you told me about. I felt as how I'd like to see him, and tell him old Liz was sorry she'd been sich a hard case, when all at once it seem'd as if somebody to-k hold of my hand, and said, 'Here I am, Liz!' It was dark, but I seen it was Jesus; seen him in my heart, the way you told me about. And before I knowed where I was, he says, 'I love you, Liz!' and then I jest cried like I ain't done since I was a child."

When I could look up, for my tears, I found the old woman's face white, but shining like an angel's."

"You'll stay by me?" she said.

"Yes, to the last, Liz."

"And you'll tell 'em that I got more than I was a-lookin' for. I was a lookin' for a stone and He give me bread—bread!"

When the end came, Liz was joyous. I witnessed one of the rarest victories I have ever seen. Out from the mire and filth of her old life, the new one—emerged to rise like a pure white shaft, pointing to heaven. And when finally the eyes closed, I was called upon to rejoice that out of the dross had risen a spirit which had washed its robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Oh! ye who are often discouraged in your work, take heart! Over and over again I think I would have failed and given up, if old Liz's own example had not shamed me. If she could toil on month after month in her almost impossible search after a perishing thing, should I be less zealous and eager after her soul? And if Liz could bear the heat of the summer sun, and the stifling odor of the dust heaps, should I, with Christ in my heart to sustain me, shrink from the vileness of her surroundings. Truly, Liz taught me, while I tried to teach her.

Once more, be encouraged! Search deep down in the dross, and you will bring up jewels that Christ will wear upon his forehead through eternity. —Christian at Work.
