BEATTY & PLOTTS.

The Beatty & Plotts celebrated Golden Tongue
PARLOR ORGAN
is acknowledged by professors of music and celebrated organists to be the leading Parlor Organ now in use. Testimonials and cards of honor are constantly being received in favor of them. We append a few and wish you to read them:--
ANTHONY, N. J., Jan. 25, 1873
Messrs. Beatty & Plotts, Gents--Your Organ, sold me, gives entire satisfaction. Its beauty of tone and style of workmanship are seldom if ever surpassed. Wish you success in your business, I am, with respect,
Prof. M. H. BEATTY.

SHAMOKIN, Pa., Feb. 11, 1874.
I have one of Beatty & Plotts' Golden Tongue Organs. It is an excellent instrument, fine tone and full power. I like it better than any I have heard.
M. H. HARREL, M. D.

LAUREY'S STAT'N, Pa., Jan. 27, 1874.
I have had Beatty & Plotts' Organ since August 14th, 1873; it gives the highest satisfaction, and has proved all that it was recommended by the pros. J. HENRY.

SLATONINGTON, Pa., Feb. 6, 1874.
Beatty & Plotts' Parlor Organ I like better than the Standard, and it gives better satisfaction, as I find in my travels.
Prof. F. V. MAYER.

ST. CLAIR, Pa., Dec. 6th, 1873.
Messrs. Beatty & Plotts, Gents--I have received the Organ, as sent by your firm to me, and I have had it examined, and it gives ample satisfaction.
Hon. JOHN SINEY.

MAHANOY CITY, Pa., Oct. 16, 1873.
The Beatty & Plotts celebrated Golden Tongue Parlor Organ is by far the best Parlor Organ in use. I have carefully examined it, and find its tone, workmanship and durability to be the best I ever saw, and I can with pleasure recommend it to any in want of a first-class parlor organ.
Prof. O. H. UNGER.

Messrs. Beatty & Plotts, of Washington, N. J., are gentlemen of enterprise, and whose presence would be a credit to any community. [Hackensack, N. J., Herald, 1873.]

WASHINGTON, N. J., Sept. 5, 1873.
To Robert Morgan, Pottsville--I am happy to state that the instrument gives entire satisfaction, not only to myself but also to the teachers of the Seminary who are better judges.
Rev. A. M. JELLY.

We say, after careful and costly experiment, it is with pleasure we introduce the "Golden Tongue," knowing it possesses many advantages over all others manufactured. The tone excels in fullness, purity, and the thousands of testimonials which are being constantly received, are evidence that our efforts have been eminently successful. ## OLD RYE'S SPEECH.

I was made to be eaten
And not to be drunk;
To be thrashed in a barn,
Not soaked in a tank.
I come as a blessing,
When put through a mill;
As bright and a curse,
When run through a still.
Make me up into loaves,
And your children are fed;
But if into drink,
I will starve them instead.
In bread, I'm a servant,
The enter shall rule;
In drink, I'm a master,
The drinker a fool.
Then remember the warning;
My strength I'll employ;
If eaten, to strengthen;
If drunk, I'll destroy.

Temperance Sermon.

Preached by REV. WILMER COFFMAN,
Pastor, in Lehighton M. E. Church,
Sabbath evening, 12th instant.

TEXT--Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth.--1. Cor. x. 24.

In these words, as also elsewhere in his epistles, St. Paul teaches that every one is in duty bound to live, not for himself alone, but for the good of all who surround him. What a beautiful standard of life this is. It is that which Christ requires of all his followers; and in that which He himself led when among men, as is declared in the words "even Christ pleased not himself." This is the teaching of God's Word throughout. If you turn to the Old Testament, you read "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and other like commands, inculcating unselfishness and benevolence. But especially in the New Testament such precepts are enforced. All of us are familiar with the golden rule laid down by our divine Redeemer, which is so beautifully illustrated by his own life. Who of us has not been charmed by his parable of the Good Samaritan, which so forcibly presents our duty to our suffering fellowmen?

All mankind constitute but a single family, for "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth." From the days of the Apostle Paul unto the present, good men have recognized this fact, and have governed themselves accordingly. The apostle says "I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many," and this has been true of all who have accepted of the gospel. The text announces a law according to which God requires all of us to act, and by which our lives will be judged. Human society is so closely united, that each member thereof exerts an influence upon the whole--"None of us liveth to himself."

Your life benefits or injures, more or less, all among whom you dwell; hence, we see that each is bound to consult the interest of others as well as his own. Now every man who is industriously engaged in some honest calling is promoting the interest of others. Let us see how this is. The humble laborer by his daily toil seeks to earn a living for himself and family; but his work is of advantage to others, and so far he is a public benefactor. The skilled mechanic following his trade may design nothing more than to gain the necessities and comforts of life; yet he adds to the general wealth. The merchant stocks his store with goods such as his customers need, and thereby benefits both himself and them. The professional man, in pursuing his calling, likewise does others good. The student gains knowledge with which the world as well as himself will be enriched. The mother in her family, the daughter in the domestic circle, the servant in the kitchen, each and all contribute somewhat to swell the sum total of human happiness, and are valuable members of society. This is one sense in which they do what our text enjoins.

But there is a higher sense in which it is to be taken. This is seen in those who consecrate their lives to promoting the spiritual good of their fellows; who make sacrifices for the souls of others. Of these our adorable Redeemer is first and most illustrious. At the altar of His love a countless host have had kindled within them such a spirit that has led them to rejoice like the apostle in dying for Christ and mankind. These have been found in all ranks of society. They are of priceless value to the church and the world. They, in this sphere, and those who benefit society in a material point, as the artisan and laborer, are all needed, and there is a place for each class; all these are advantageous, and the world is the better for having them in it.

I would now ask, is there any class in our midst that in no sense meets the requirements of the text? How is it with respect to those engaged in the sale of ardent spirits? Do they contribute in any way to the general good? Are they promoting the well-being of others? Does strong drink benefit those who use it physically? Who does not know that it undermines the health of him who uses it, and casts his divinely beautiful form into an untimely grave? Who to-day will agree that anyone is thereby better fitted to do a hard day's work? Physically it curses those who use it. But may it not benefit man intellectually? Who will agree that such is the fact? Strong drink dulls and darkens the intellect, and detaches the God-given reason, and brings the lofty thinker down well-nigh to the level of the brute. Strong drink has proven the ruin of many a noble mind. The grog-shop is the enemy of education, and in countless instances totally undoes the work of the common school, academy and college. Intellectually as

Our First Difficulty.

BY JULIA E. ROBERTS.

Married life is seldom without its trials, yet Robert and I had been married eight months before we seriously disagreed in anything. Our life during that time had not been a season of perfect bliss as some would have it, but we certainly had been happy--as happy I think as any can be before reaching Paradise, and when our baby came, it seemed as if our cup was full to overflowing. I like, even now, to dwell on the joy of those days when I was first a mother, and as for Robert, I think there never was a prouder or more affectionate father than he. "Well, Esther," he would say when he came in at night, "we are not rich in houses or lands as some are, but we are rich in our daughter; she is like wisdom, for she is more precious than rubies." But I know that the fond praise of dotting parents is but emptiness to others, so I will not tire you by repeating all he said. It was not idle talk to me, however, no praise to my imagination was too great for my little one, my May-blossom, as I called her, for she came to us in the merry month of May. Never, we both agreed, was there a child so wonderful as ours, and before the little stranger had been with us a month, we had laid many brilliant plans for her future.

But I am wandering from my story. We are living in Kansas, far away from both Robert's relations and my own. We had not, therefore, as is generally the case, a host of aunts, uncles, and cousins to urge that the child should be called according to their fancy. So it came to pass that our baby was nearly two months old before the subject had been debated. But one day, how well I remember it, Robert said, as he tossed her in his arms for a final goodbye before returning to the store, "Esther don't you think its about time this maiden of ours had a name of her own. Wilson was asking me this morning what we had decided to call her, and I told him I supposed we thought her good enough without a name, for we had never spoken of it."

"Mr. Wilson's child was named before he was a week old, so I don't wonder that he thinks us rather tardy," said I.

"Well, what shall it be, Esther? Rosamond or Rachel? Bridget or Joanna? Kate or Arabella? Or haven't you thought of the matter yet?"

"Our child's name was decided in my mind long ago," I answered, and then for some reason I cannot account for, I hesitated, though I certainly had no idea of what was to follow.

"Well, let us hear it. It is something extraordinary, I suppose, nothing less would suit our darling."

"It is Mary," I said.

"Mary! surely you must be joking. You can't mean it, Esther!"

"Why not?" I asked, the blood rushing to my face involuntarily.

"So you have a Byronic passion for the name Mary. Well, I must acknowledge that I am entirely free from it. But seriously, Esther, you cannot think of calling our daughter by that name?"

"But I do not think of it," I responded, "and I cannot imagine what objection you can have, for almost everyone agrees that there is no sweeter name."

My husband's face grew dark. "Any name but that, Esther, you might as well not name the child at all. Hardly a family of any size in the country, but has a Mary among its members. But I can't talk any longer now, I shall be late as it is. Look in the dictionary and find something else that suits you, and tell me at tea."

And he kissed both baby and me and was gone.

I can hardly tell you what my feelings were during the long hours of that afternoon. It is true that my husband and I had differed before in matters of taste or opinion, but it had been comparatively easy to yield to them. My child's name, however, was a different matter. I could not remember the time when I had not looked forward to calling my oldest daughter by the name of Mary. My doll-babies, one and all, had been called by it. It was dear to me above every other name--and now to give it up--"Never, I cannot, and I shall not!" I said firmly to myself.

At the tea-table that evening, we discussed a variety of topics, but both avoided, as if by common consent, the one subject nearest our hearts. When the meal was over, however, and we sat together near our little one's cradle, Robert commenced:

"Well, Esther have you found any name this afternoon that pleased you? I've come to the conclusion that Laura and Evelyn suit me very well, Laura Evelyn Spencer. How do you like it?"

"I like both names well enough," I answered coolly, "but there is only one name for our daughter, and that I have told you, it is my mother's name as you know, Robert, and I have always said that my first daughter should be my mother's namesake, but I never dreamed that you would feel so about it," I continued, ready to cry, yet keeping the tears back by a great effort.

"If your mother were not living, Esther, there would be some reason for your feeling so, but as it is--"

"If my mother was dead, I would not care so much about it, for it then could afford her no pleasure," I cried.

"If it were any name but Mary, I would consent, even though it did not please me," said Robert. "Come, Esther, be reasonable; there are so many pretty names, and Mary, besides being so common, is to me the very essence of plainness."

But my mind was made up, and I would not listen.

"She is your daughter, as well as mine, Robert," I said, "and, of course, you will name her to suit yourself, but to me, she can never be any other than what I have said."

How our conversation would have ended I cannot tell, but fortunately for us both, it was interrupted by callers who spent the evening with us, and for the time being our disputes and its cause were forgotten.

At breakfast the next morning, the subject was not alluded to in even the most remote way, and at noon, and in the evening it was the same.

Another day came and went, and still another, and yet not a word was said. Our table-talk was no longer the
