At this instant the Marquis Foscar-ini entered the room, and Le Roy ac-companied him to the table, where they seared themselves to play, others being assembled. At the gaming table there was a Paris banker, a captain of an English vessel, and two planters from Havana, all absorbed in the chapped of Havana, all absorbed in the charces of the game. Le Roy commenced by throwing down ten louis, then ten more, and so on until he lost nearly all. As he pushed the money aside he shivered, and his head sank upon his breast. Foecarini laid his haad upon his arm. "Why, what is the matter, Le Roy?" he said in surprise. "Nothing," responded the young officer, as he once more placed ten louis officer, as he once more placed ten louis upon the board. This time he gained one hundred, gradually the sum in-creased and doubled. The banker won 130,000 francs, the captain 20,000, and the planters 130,000. It was the Marquis Foscarini who had lost all this money. Much excited the gamesters drank together, and then promised to meet again in a few hours. At the solicitation of Olympia, Le whose loss had been very great. The meeting of the party again took place as arranged, and Foscarini lost all he possessed in the world—his pala-ces in Florence and Naples, his villas at the foot of Vesuvius and in the neighborhood of Rome- there remain-ed not a vestage of his large fortune. He was ruined. Through the closed shutters and the crimson curtains the day was nearing, and made the dving snutters and the crimion curtains the day was piercing, and made the dying candles look more pale. Of these six gamblers, four resembled statutes. The immense losses of their host amazed them, although accustomed as they were to loss as a result of gaming.

Roy postponed speaking to her father, whose loss had been very great.

were to loss as a result of gaming. Two men alone among them seemed to retain their self-possession, and they were Le Roy and Foscarini. The lat-ter was searching his pockets in valn hope of fluding something to stake, but not even his watch remained. His countenance was terrible to behold. "Gentlemen," he at length said, "all I once had is now yours, and you can

"You once loved my daughter, and I refused you her hand."
"You did."
"You did."

The addressed Olympia without any apparent trembling or embarrassment, paying her only the ordinary compli-ments permitted by society. The mar-quis, feeling entirely reassured, and having perfect confidence, made Le Roy his friend and confidant. While the old nobleman was misled, the young peo-ple, nevertheless understood each other, and in all respects Olympia assisted her lover in his scheme. " Do you love her still ?" "Yes, fervently." In gesture they implored Le Roy to refuse. "Did you not hear me ?" continued Foscarini. Will you play for the pos-session of my daughter?" its merits nevertheless expressed ad-

Diration for the game. One evening Le Roy came haif an hour earlier to the hotel than was his custom. On this occasion he brought with him the sum of fifty louis. It was the only money Olympia had still in her possession. Le Roy was without means, and was obliged to yield to circunstances, as failure to play would have called forth the ill will of the marquis and deprived them of meeting. "This is all that remains," said

"Should I lose it, this life of decep-tion must end," responded Le Roy. "I will soon go to the marquis and request your hand in marriage."

"And death I Have you no fear of death ?"

"No, Olympia." he replied, thought-fully. "I do not fear. I believe in a great power. We of this world are forced into life, not of our own free will, but through the will of others. This sections This existence, with its suffering, its hopes and fears, is our punisement ; its disappointments our curse. This is the life of the flesh, that which is corruptible ; beyond lies the life of the soul." "But what may the soul not suffer in the hereafter? What may it not endure ?" "Nothing except it be happiness, "re-sponded Le Roy. " Our misery is here, our peace is beyond the grave."

"And the grave?" inquired the girl with a shudder; "the grave!" "Is what we mortais most dread, be-cause it possesses horror.
